

CRS Report for Congress

Sentencing Levels for Crack and Powder Cocaine: Kimbrough v. United States and the Impact of United States v. Booker

Updated January 29, 2008

Brian T. Yeh
Legislative Attorney
American Law Division

Charles Doyle
Senior Specialist
American Law Division

Prepared for Members and Committees of Congress

Sentencing Levels for Crack and Powder Cocaine: Kimbrough v. United States and the Impact of United States v. Booker

Summary

Pursuant to the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986, Congress established basic sentencing levels for crack cocaine offenses. Congress amended 21 U.S.C. § 841 to provide for a 100:1 ratio in the quantities of powder cocaine and crack cocaine that trigger a mandatory minimum penalty. As amended, 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)(A) establishes a mandatory minimum 10-year term of imprisonment and a maximum life term of imprisonment for offenses involving 5 kilograms of cocaine or 50 grams of cocaine base. In addition, 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)(B) establishes a mandatory five-year term of imprisonment for offenses involving 500 grams of cocaine or 5 grams of cocaine base.

Federal sentencing guidelines established by the United States Sentencing Commission (the Guidelines) reflect the statutory distinctions. Until recently, the Guidelines were binding. The judge had discretion to sentence a defendant, but only within the narrow sentencing range that the Guidelines provided. The Supreme Court in United States v. Booker declared that the Guidelines must be considered advisory rather than mandatory. Instead of being bound by the Guidelines, sentencing courts must treat the federal guidelines as just one of a number of sentencing factors set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) (which include the need to avoid undue sentencing disparity). Since Booker, some courts have concluded that although the Guidelines treat 1 gram of crack like 100 grams of powder cocaine, a judge who does not believe that crack cocaine is 100 times worse than powder cocaine may now impose a lower sentence than the one recommended by the Guidelines — arguably, at least so long as the sentence does not go below the mandatory minimum. Appellate courts that have ruled on the issue believe their discretion is more circumscribed. In Kimbrough v. United States, the Supreme Court addressed this issue and held that a federal trial court may impose a sentence below that called for under the Guidelines' 100:1 ratio, based on its conclusion that the ratio is greater than necessary or may foster unwarranted disparity.

The crack/powder disparity issue may be resolved either administratively or legislatively. The U.S. Sentencing Commission has recommended that Congress adjust the statutory ratio, and its most recent amendments to the Guidelines eliminate the 100:1 ratio for future sentencing guideline purposes (except at the point at which the statutory mandatory minimums are triggered). The Sentencing Commission has also decided to make these amendments retroactively applicable, thus allowing eligible crack cocaine offenders who were sentenced prior to November 1, 2007, to petition a federal judge to reduce their sentences. Although these amendments alter the crack/powder disparity within the sentencing guidelines, a change to the statutory 100:1 ratio found in 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1) would require legislation. Several related bills have been introduced in the 110th Congress, including H.R. 79, H.R. 460, H.R. 4545, H.R. 4842, H.R. 5035, S. 1383, S. 1685, and S. 1711.

Contents

Background	1
United States v. Booker	4
Booker and the Crack Defendant	8
Kimbrough v. United States	12
Amendment of the Sentencing Guidelines	14
Retroactivity Decision	17
Legislative Solutions	17
109 th Congress	17
110 th Congress	18
Appendix	20
Drug Quantity Table (Before and After Amendment)	20

Sentencing Levels for Crack and Powder Cocaine: Kimbrough v. United States and the Impact of United States v. Booker

Background¹

*United States v. Booker*² declared that the once-binding federal sentencing guidelines (the Guidelines) set by the United States Sentencing Commission are now only advisory.³ Until recently, the Guidelines reflected a statutory scheme that made crack cocaine defendants subject to the same sentence as those defendants trafficking in 100 times more powder cocaine; thus, the sentences for crack cocaine offenses were three to over six times longer than those for offenses involving equivalent amounts of powder cocaine.⁴ Since Booker, several courts have addressed the question of whether the 100:1 ratio produces disparities that justify a sentence lower than that recommended by the Guidelines. The Supreme Court resolved that issue in Kimbrough v. United States, by holding that a federal trial court may impose a sentence below that called for under the Guidelines' 100:1 ratio, based on its conclusion that the ratio is greater than necessary or may foster unwarranted disparity.⁵

The pre-Booker era for federal sentencing began with the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984,⁶ which established a sentencing system under the United States Sentencing Commission's federal sentencing guidelines.⁷ The previous system tailored sentences to the individual defendants. Judges were given broad ranges

¹ This report was originally prepared by Paul Starett Wallace, Jr., Specialist, CRS.

² 543 U.S. 220 (2005).

³ Id. at 245-46.

⁴ E.g., U.S.S.G. §2D1.1(c)(1)(November 1, 2006)(both 150 kilograms of powder cocaine and 1.5 kilograms of cocaine base were assigned a base offense level of 38); the same ratio continued throughout §2D1.1(C) for lesser amounts and lower base offense levels). Amendments that became effective on November 1, 2007, adjusted the ratios, U.S.S.G. §2D1.1(c)(1) (November 1, 2007).

⁵ Kimbrough v. United States, 552 U.S. ___, 128 S. Ct. 558 (2007).

⁶ Sentencing Reform Act of 1984, 28 U.S.C. § 991(b)(1) (1988).

⁷ 23 U.S.C. § 995(a)(20) (1988).

within which they could, at their discretion, sentence a defendant.⁸ The sentence was supposed to be based on the defendant's character as much as his conduct. Thereafter, the discretion given to the judge was passed on to the Parole Commission to determine how much of the judge's sentence the defendant ultimately served.⁹ Under the Guidelines, the judge's role at sentencing was more uniform and unvaried.¹⁰ The judge could inquire into a number of factors, including the defendant's conduct and criminal history. The judge then weighed each factor according to the Sentencing Commission's mandate and calculated an offense level for the defendant.¹¹ The judge had discretion to sentence the defendant but, with little ground for departure, only within the narrow sentencing range that the Guidelines provided for each offense level.¹² The Sentencing Reform Act also abolished the Parole Commission's role.¹³

Crack cocaine became prevalent in the mid-1980s and received widespread media attention following the death of the University of Maryland all-American basketball player, Len Bias, from the use of cocaine.¹⁴ Crack cocaine was portrayed as a violence-inducing, highly addictive plague of inner cities, and this notoriety led to the quick passage of a federal sentencing law concerning crack cocaine in 1986.¹⁵ This legislation created two mandatory sentencing ranges for drug offenses.¹⁶ The lower bracket spanned periods of imprisonment ranging from a mandatory minimum of 5 years to a maximum of 40 years; the higher bracket spanned periods ranging from a mandatory minimum of 10 years to a maximum of life.¹⁷ Congress prescribed the threshold quantities of both crack and powdered cocaine required to bring a particular offense within either bracket.¹⁸ Despite the chemical identity of crack and powder cocaine, Congress set widely disparate threshold quantities for the two drugs, requiring 100 times more powder cocaine than crack cocaine to trigger inclusion in

⁸ 28 U.S.C. § 995(b) (1988).

⁹ 28 U.S.C. § 995(a)(9-10) (1988).

¹⁰ 28 U.S.C. § 994(w) (1988).

¹¹ 28 U.S.C. § 991(a)(1) (1988).

¹² See 18 U.S.C. §3553(b) (the statute specifies what departures are allowable in cases where "there exist an aggravating or mitigating circumstance of a kind, or to a degree not adequately taken into consideration by the Sentencing Commission in formulating the guidelines").

¹³ P.L. 98-473, §218(a)(5), 98 Stat. 2027 (1984).

¹⁴ Washington Post, June 20, 1986, p. A-1, article by Keith Harriston and Sally Jenkins.

¹⁵ The sentencing differential for crack and powder cocaine offenses had its origin in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986, P.L. 99-570, 100 Stat. 3207 (1986) (codified in pertinent part at 21 U.S.C. § 841). The act speaks of "cocaine base," not crack. See 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)(A)(iii). The guidelines, however, define cocaine base to mean crack cocaine. See United States Sentencing Guidelines (U.S.S.G.) § 2D1.1, n.D (November 1, 2007).

¹⁶ See id. § 1002 (codified at 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)).

¹⁷ See id.

¹⁸ See id.

a particular range.¹⁹ The rationale offered was that many considered crack much more addictive than powder cocaine, and they feared a wave of violent crimes spawned by drug users as well as the health threats to infants born to addicted mothers.²⁰ The Sentencing Commission also incorporated this ratio into the drug guidelines, although it later concluded that the 100:1 powder to crack ratio produces sentences that are greater than necessary to satisfy the purposes of punishment because it exaggerates the relative harmfulness of crack cocaine; the majority of crack offenders have low drug quantities, low criminal histories, and no history of violence. The Sentencing Commission also concluded that a ratio providing for sentences that are greater than necessary creates an unwarranted disparity, inappropriate uniformity, racial disparity, and disrespect for the law.²¹

Over the years, Congress has had second thoughts about the disparity in drug sentences. To achieve a more equitable balance, as part of the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994, Congress enacted a safety valve provision, which provided an avenue for lowering mandatory minimum sentences in a limited category of drug cases.²² During the same year, Congress directed the Sentencing Commission to study the crack-to-powder ratio and submit recommendations relative to whether the ratio should be retained or modified.²³ The Sentencing Commission recommended revision of the 100:1 quantity ratio in 1995, finding the ratio to be unjustified by the small differences in the two forms of cocaine.²⁴ Congress rejected the recommendation of the Sentencing Commission and did not change the law.²⁵

¹⁹ See id. Congress set the threshold quantities for the lower range at 500 grams of powder cocaine and 5 grams of cocaine base and the threshold quantities for the higher range at 5 kilograms and 50 grams, respectively. Thus, for sentencing purposes, Congress treated 1 unit of crack cocaine on the same level as 100 units of powder cocaine. Relative to the difference between crack and powder cocaine — powder cocaine is derived from coca paste, which is in turn derived from the leaves of the coca plant — crack cocaine is made by taking cocaine powder and cooking it with baking soda and water until it forms a hard substance. These “rocks” can then be broken into pieces and sold in small quantities. Each gram of powder cocaine produces approximately .89 grams of crack. United States Sentencing Commission, Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy (May 2002).

²⁰ See United States Sentencing Commission, Special Report to Congress: Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy, pp. 117-118 (1995).

²¹ See United States Sentencing Commission, Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy, Executive Summary, pp. v-viii (May 2002).

²² See 18 U.S.C. § 3553 (f); see also United States v. Matos, 328 F.3d 34, 38-42 (1st Cir. 2003) (a description of the operation of the safety valve).

²³ See Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994, P.L. 103-322, § 280006, 108 Stat. 1796, 2097 (1994).

²⁴ See Notice of Submission to Congress of Amendments to the Sentencing Guidelines, 60 Fed. Reg. 25,075-25,076 (May 10, 1995).

²⁵ See P.L. 104-38, §1, 109 Stat. 334, 334 (1995).

Two years later, the Sentencing Commission issued a follow-up report.²⁶ In this report, the commission reiterated its position that the 100:1 ratio was excessive.²⁷ It recommended that the 100:1 ratio be reduced to 5:1 by increasing the threshold quantities for offenses involving crack cocaine and decreasing the threshold quantities for offenses involving powder cocaine.²⁸ Again, Congress took no action and did not amend the law.

In 2001, the Senate Judiciary Committee asked the Sentencing Commission to revisit its position regarding the 100:1 ratio, and in the subsequent year, the Sentencing Commission issued its third report.²⁹ In this report, the commission again proposed narrowing the gap that separated crack cocaine offenses from powder cocaine because (1) the severe penalties for crack cocaine offenses seemed to fall mainly on low-level criminals and African Americans, (2) the dangers posed by crack could be satisfactorily addressed through sentencing enhancements that would apply neutrally to all drug offenses, and (3) recent data suggested that the penalties were disproportionate to the harms associated with the two drugs.³⁰ Unlike the previous report, the Commission did not recommend a reduction in the powder cocaine threshold. The Commission did recommend elimination of the five-year mandatory minimum for simple possession of crack cocaine. Congress considered the substance of the commission's 2002 report but took no action.

Judges have long been critical of the automatic prison terms, commonly referred to as mandatory minimum sentences, which were enacted pursuant to the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1986 in part to stem the drug trade.³¹ Now some judges are saying that with the combination of Democratic leadership and the growing Republican support for a modest change, this may provide the best chance in years for a review of the system if the 110th Congress revisits the sentencing laws which, according to Senate Judiciary staff members, is quite likely.³²

United States v. Booker

Prior to the Supreme's Court's decision in United States v. Booker,³³ the case law was generally cognizant of the seriousness in the sentencing disparities between ²⁶ See U.S. Sentencing Commission, Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy (1997) (1997 Report).

²⁷ Id. at 2.

²⁸ Id. at 2, 5, 9.

²⁹ See United States Sentencing Commission, Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy (2002), pp.2-3 (2002 Report).

³⁰ Id. at v-viii.

³¹ New York Times, January 9, 2007, pg. 12.

³² Id.

³³ 543 U.S. 220 (2005).

crack and powder cocaine but regularly deferred to Congress's policy judgements.³⁴ This undertaking led to a series of decisions that upheld the 100:1 ratio against a variety of challenges, which included the Equal Protection Clause³⁵ and the rule of lenity.³⁶ It was also decided that under the mandatory guidelines system that was popular before Booker, neither the Sentencing Commission's criticism of the 100:1 ratio nor its unacknowledged 1995 proposal to eliminate the differential provided a valid basis for leniency in the sentencing of crack cocaine offenders.³⁷

In Booker, the Supreme Court consolidated two lower court cases and considered them in tandem, *United States v. Fanfan*³⁸ and United States v. Booker.³⁹ Booker was arrested after officers found in his duffle bag 92.5 grams of crack cocaine. He later gave a written statement to the police in which he admitted selling an additional 566 grams of crack cocaine.⁴⁰ A jury in the United States District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin found Booker guilty of two counts of possessing at least 50 grams of cocaine base with the intent to distribute it, in violation of 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)(A)(iii).⁴¹ At sentencing, the judge found by a preponderance of the evidence that Booker had distributed 566 grams in addition to the 92.5 grams that the jury found; the judge also found that Booker had obstructed justice.⁴² In the absence of the judge's additional findings, Booker would have only faced a maximum sentence of 262 months under the United States Sentencing Guidelines.⁴³ The judge, however sentenced Booker to 360 months, based on the Guidelines' treatment of the additional cocaine and the obstruction of justice.⁴⁴ The ³⁴ See, e.g., United States v. Eirby, 262 F.3d 31, 41 (1st Cir. 2001); United States v. Singleterry, 29 F.3d 733, 741 (1st Cir. 1994); United States v. Anderson, 82 F.3d 436, 440-41 (D.C. Cir. 1996); United States v. Dumas, 64 F.3d 1427, 1429-430 (9th Cir. 1995).

³⁵ See, e.g., United States v. Graciani, 61 F.3d 70, 74-75 (1st Cir. 1995); United States v. Bingham, 81 F.3d 617, 630-31 (6th Cir. 1996); United States v. Thomas, 86 F.3d 647, 655 (7th Cir. 1996).

³⁶ See, e.g., United States v. Manzueta, 167 F.3d 92, 94 (1st Cir. 1999); United States v. Herron, 97 F.3d 234, 238-39 (8th Cir. 1996); United States v. Canales, 91 F.3d 363, 367-69 (2d Cir. 1996).

³⁷ See United States v. Andrade, 94 F.3d 9, 14-15 (1st Cir. 1996); United States v. Sanchez, 81 F.3d 9, 11 (1st Cir. 1996); United States v. Booker, 73 F.3d 706, 710 (7th Cir. 1996); United States v. Alton, 60 F.3d 1065, 1070-71 (3d Cir. 1995); United States v. Haynes, 985 F.2d 65, 70 (2d Cir. 1993)(each discussing the possibility of a downward departure under U.S.S.G. § 5K2.0). See generally, CRS Report 97-743, Federal Cocaine Sentencing: Legal Issues, by Paul S. Wallace Jr.

³⁸ 2004 WL 1723114 (D. Me. June 28, 2004), cert. granted, 542 U.S. 956 (2004).

³⁹ 375 F.3d 508 (7th Cir. 2004), cert. granted, 542 U.S. 956 (2004).

⁴⁰ Id.

⁴¹ Id.

⁴² Id.

⁴³ Id. at 510.

⁴⁴ Id.

United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed the conviction but overturned the sentence.⁴⁵

Narcotic agents arrested Fanfan when they discovered 1.25 kilograms of cocaine and 281.6 grams of cocaine base in his vehicle.⁴⁶ A jury in the District of Maine found that he possessed “500 or more grams” of cocaine with the intent to distribute, in violation of 21 U.S.C. § 846. At sentencing, the court determined that Fanfan was the “ring leader of a significant drug conspiracy,” which, combined with his criminal history, resulted in a sentence of 188 to 235 months under the Guidelines. However, four days before the June 28, 2004, sentencing hearing, the Supreme Court decided Blakely v. Washington,⁴⁷ holding that as part of a state sentencing guideline system, a Washington state judge could not find an aggravating fact authorizing a higher sentence than the state statutes otherwise permitted. The sentencing judge in Fanfan considered the effect that Blakely may have on the federal sentencing Guidelines and recalculated the Guidelines based only on the possession of 500 grams and imposed the 78 month maximum for that range.

The Supreme Court granted certiorari in Booker and Fanfan in an effort to give some guidance to lower courts that had begun a variety of applications of the Blakely decision to federal prisoners. For example, in Booker, the Seventh Circuit found that the federal sentencing guidelines violate the Sixth Amendment in some situations.⁴⁸ The Fifth Circuit, on the other hand, concluded that Blakely did not apply to the Guidelines because to do so would create a separate “offense” for each possible sentence for a particular crime.⁴⁹ The Second Circuit, without resolving the issue, certified questions to the Supreme Court regarding the application of Blakely to federal sentences pursuant to the Guidelines.⁵⁰

The Supreme Court issued a majority opinion in two parts. The first part, written by Justice Stevens for a 5-4 majority (Justices Scalia, Souter, Thomas, and Ginsburg) decided that the Guidelines violate the Sixth Amendment and are thus unconstitutional because they require a judge to increase a sentence above the maximum guideline range if the judge finds facts to justify an increase. They said a defendant’s right to trial by jury is violated if a judge must impose a higher sentence than the sentence that the judge could have imposed based on the facts found by the jury.⁵¹ Pursuant to 18 U.S.C. § 3553(b), the Guidelines were mandatory

⁴⁵ Id. at 515.

⁴⁶ United States v. Fanfan, 2004 WL 1723114 (D. Me. June 28 2004).

⁴⁷ 542 U.S. 296 (2004).

⁴⁸ United States v. Booker, 375 F.3d 508, 509 (7th Cir. 2004), judgment of the Court of Appeals aff’d and remanded; judgment of the District Court vacated and remanded, 543 U.S. 160 (2005).

⁴⁹ United States v. Pineiro, 377 F.3d 464 (5th Cir. 2004).

⁵⁰ United States v. Penaranda, 375 F.3d 238 (2d Cir. 2004).

⁵¹ For example, the Guidelines require a defendant convicted by a jury of possession with intent to distribute five grams of crack cocaine to be sentenced within a guideline range of and thus create a statutory maximum for the purpose of Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000), which had condemned mandatory judicial fact-finding for purposes of imposing a sentence beyond the statutory maximum.⁵² The Court had applied Apprendi's reasoning to a state sentencing guideline system in Blakely v. Washington, and the rationale applied with equal force to the federal guideline system in Booker.⁵³ Under the then current administration of the Guidelines, judges, rather than juries, were required to find sentence determining facts, and thus the practice was unconstitutional.
(continued...)

The second part, written by Justice Breyer for a different 5-4 majority (Justices Rehnquist, O'Connor, Kennedy, and Ginsburg) remedies this defect by holding that the Guidelines are advisory, thereby making it necessary for the courts to consider the Guidelines along with other traditional factors when deciding on a sentence, and also finding that the appellate courts may review sentences for "reasonableness." Driven by the Court's first holding, it "excises" (through severance and excision of two provisions) 18 U.S.C. § 3553(b)(1) and §3742(e) from the Sentencing Reform Act and declares the Guidelines are now "advisory."⁵⁴ Pursuant to § 3553(a), district judges need only to "consider" the Guideline range as one of many factors, including the need for the sentence to provide just punishment for the offense (§ 3553(a)(2)(A)), to afford adequate deterrence to criminal conduct (§ 3553(a)(2)(B)), to protect the public from further crimes of the defendant (§ 3553(a)(2)(C)), and to avoid unwarranted sentencing disparities among similarly situated defendants (§3553(a)(6)).⁵⁵ The Sentencing Reform Act, absent the mandate of § 3553(b)(1), authorizes the judge to apply his own perceptions of just punishment, deterrence, and protection of the public, even when these differ from the perceptions of the United States Sentencing Commission.⁵⁶ The Sentencing Reform Act continues to provide for appeals from sentencing decisions (regardless of whether the trial judge sentences are within or outside of the Guideline range) based on an "unreasonableness" standard (18 U.S.C. §§ 3553(a)⁵⁷ and 3742(e)(3)).⁵⁸

⁵¹ (...continued)

63 to 78 months. Prior to Booker, the Guidelines required a judge to increase the sentence beyond that prescribed range if the judge found additional facts (e.g., the presence of a gun, additional drug quantities, or a leadership role in the illegal activity). Each of these factual findings required a new higher sentencing range. The Court said a judge may not go over the sentence at the top of the Guideline range authorized by the jury — in this case 78 months — unless the jury finds the necessary facts for the higher range or the defendant admits to them.

⁵² 543 U.S. at 221. Apprendi held that "[o]ther than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." 530 U.S. at 490.

⁵³ Id. at 244.

⁵⁴ Id. at 246-247.

⁵⁵ Id. at 260.

⁵⁶ Id. at 234.

⁵⁷ The primary directive in Section 3553(a) is for sentencing courts to "impose a sentence sufficient, but not greater than necessary, to comply with the purposes set forth in paragraph (continued...)

Booker* and the Crack Defendant

After Booker, the federal courts have wrestled with whether they may or must impose sentences below the Guidelines' ranges in crack cocaine cases in view of the United States Sentencing Commission's conclusions and recommendations, the facts and circumstances of the case, the history and characteristics of the defendant, and the command of 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(2)(6) to avoid unwarranted sentencing disparity. Typically, the federal courts follow a three-step sentencing procedure in which they determine "(1) the applicable advisory range under the Sentencing Guidelines; (2) whether, pursuant to the Sentencing Commission's policy statements, any departures from the advisory guideline range clearly apply; and (3) the appropriate sentence in light of the statutory factors to be considered in imposing a sentence."⁵⁹

There is support for the view that the federal courts are not compelled to lower a sentence recommended by the Guidelines based on the sentencing differential for crack cocaine versus powder cocaine.⁶⁰ On the other hand, in more than a few cases, Booker has led to lower sentences than those suggested by the 100:1 ratio ranges established in the Guidelines. To wit:

- United States v. Nellum, 2005 WL 300073 (N.D. Ind. February 3, 2005) (in crack case where the guideline range was 168-210 months, imposing sentence of 108 months where given the particular circumstances of the case — Nellum's age, the likelihood of recidivism, his status as a veteran, his strong family ties, his medical condition, and his serious drug dependency — the Court did not view this disparity as being "unwarranted"; using age/recidivism information from the Sentencing Commission; declining to address 100:1 crack-powder issue but considering the fact that drug weight escalated based on controlled buys).

⁵⁷ (...continued)

2." Section 3553(a)(2) states that such purposes are (A) to reflect the seriousness of the offense, to promote respect for the law, and to provide just punishment for the offense; (B) to afford adequate deterrence to criminal conduct; (C) to protect the public from further crimes of the defendant; and (D) to provide the defendant with needed educational or vocational training, medical care, or other correctional treatment in the most effective manner.

In determining the minimally sufficient sentence, § 3553(a) further directs sentencing courts to consider the following factors: (A) "the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history and characteristics of the defendant" (§ 3553(a)(1)); (B) the penological needs to be served by the sentence (§3553(2)); (C) "the kinds of sentences available" (§ 3553(a)(3)); (D) "the need to avoid unwarranted sentence disparities among defendants with similar records who have been found guilty of similar conduct" (§ 3553(a)(6)); and (E) "the need to provide restitution to any victims of the offense." (§ 3553(a)(7)).

⁵⁸ 543 U.S. at 261.

⁵⁹ United States v. Beamon, 373 F. Supp.2d 878 (E.D. Wis. 2005).

⁶⁰ United States v. Gipson, 425 F.3d 335, 337 (7th Cir. 2005).

- United States v. Clay, 2005 WL 1076243 (E.D. Tenn. 2005) (taking all the factors into consideration, including the congressional mandate that sentences for crack offenses be stiffer than for cocaine offenses, the Court found that the following factors outweigh the significant weight that it had determined to give to the sentencing guidelines advisory range, regardless of whether it considers the range to be 235 to 293 months [based on judicial fact-finding] or 188 to 235 months [based on jury fact-finding]; the defendant's history and characteristics as set forth; his criminal history category overstates his criminal history and weighs in his favor against the likelihood that he will commit another offense; the fact that he withdrew from the conspiracy and led a productive life for one year prior to his arrest in this case weighs in his favor against the likelihood that he will commit another offense; and the unjustified disparity in the 100:1 quality ratio for punishment between cocaine base or crack and powder cocaine; based on a careful consideration of all the factors listed in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a), the Court found that a reasonable sentence for the defendant was 156 months on each count to run concurrently, a sentence that is sufficient, but not greater than necessary, to serve the purpose of sentencing established by Congress).
- United States v. Williams, 372 F. Supp.2d 1335 (M.D. Fla. 2005) (District Court's discretion is not limited to the sentence that the government advocates; instead, the court will consider the sentencing guidelines on an advisory basis in the context of statutory factors in 18 U.S.C. § 3553. The Court was mindful of the substantial criticism of the sentencing disparity between powder cocaine and crack cocaine — the same drug in different forms. The Court was also aware of the evidence suggesting that this disparity has a discriminatory impact on African Americans, of whom Williams is one — the 17-year sentence is a substantial term for a relatively minor offense).
- Simon v. United States, 361 F. Supp.2d 35 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) (in imposing sentence lower than what advisory guideline range called for based on 600 grams of crack, considering disparity between crack and powder as principal factor, but also considering the defendant's age, medical condition, procedural history of case, and sentence of co-defendant).
- United States v. Moreland, 366 F. Supp.2d 416 (S.D.W.Va. 2005), vac'd in part, 437 F.3d 424 (4th Cir. 2006) (satisfied that the defendant was neither a "repeat violent offender" nor "drug trafficker," a sentence of 10 years in prison, followed by an eight-year term of supervised release rather than the advisory Guideline sentence of 30 years to life for distributing five grams or more of cocaine base was appropriate and reasonable for achieving the goals in § 3553(a)).

In some cases, after considering the factors set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a), the courts have found a different ratio, either 20:1 or 10:1, more compatible with the statutory command of 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(6) to weigh the need to avoid unwarranted disparities:

- United States v. Smith, 359 F. Supp.2d 771 (E.D. Wis. 2005) (defendant subject to Guidelines recommended range of from 121 to 151 months and a statutory mandatory minimum was sentenced to 18 months based upon the government's motion for a substantial assistance departure, a 20:1 ratio [supported by the Sentencing Commission's 2002 report], the defendant's employment history, community service, family responsibilities, and good conduct since commission of the offense).
- United States v. Leroy, 373 F.Supp.2d 887 (E.D. Wis. 2005) (substituting a 20:1 ratio for the 100:1 ratio used in the Guidelines, but otherwise imposing a sentence recommended by them, the court imposed a sentence at the bottom a 70-87 month range [rather than one within 100-125 range the Guidelines called for with the 100:1 ratio in place]).
- United States v. Castillo, 2005 WL 1214280 (S.D.N.Y. May 20, 2005) (substituting a 20:1 ratio for the 100:1 ratio used in the Guidelines, the court imposed a sentence at the bottom of the 87-108 month range rather than 135-168 month range the Guidelines otherwise recommended).
- United States v. Perry, 389 F.Supp.2d 278 (D.R.I. 2005) (finding that use of a 20:1 ratio would result in a 97-121 month range rather than the Guidelines' 188 -235, but bound by a 10-year mandatory minimum, the court sentenced the defendant to 120 months' imprisonment).
- United States v. Fisher, 451 F.Supp.2d 553 (S.D.N.Y. October 11, 2005) (substituting a 10:1 ratio for the 100:1 ratio with an increase in light of 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(2)(C)(public protection), the court imposed a sentence of 121 months rather than one within the 235-293 month Guidelines range).
- United States v. Stukes, 2005 WL 2560244 (S.D.N.Y. October 12, 2005) (the court opted for a sentence within the 33-41 month range [20:1 ratio], rather than the Guidelines' recommended range of 51-63 months [100:1 ratio]).
- Clairborne v. United States, cert. granted, 127 S.Ct. 551 (2006). Mario Clairborne was convicted of possession of 5.03 grams of crack cocaine in federal court and was subject to a five-year mandatory minimum sentence for the offense. But in light of Clairborne's lack of a criminal history and the absence of violence associated with his offense, the district court judge applied a safety-valve exemption from the mandatory minimum. The Court was to review the sentence which represented a departure below the federal Sentencing Guideline to determine whether it was reasonable, and to decide whether it was consistent with United States v. Booker 543 U.S.220 (2005), to require that a substantial departure from the Guidelines be justified by extraordinary circumstances, but the lower court's decision was vacated as moot when the Court was advised that Clairborne had died, 127 S.Ct. 2245 (2007).

The Appellate courts have not been so inclined to ignore the Guidelines. For instance, the First Circuit held that the district court could not discard the guideline range and construct a new sentencing range,⁶¹ but could take into account, on a case-by-case basis, “the nature of the contraband and/or the severity of a projected guideline sentence.”⁶² The First Circuit described the disparity as a “problem that has tormented enlightened observers ever since Congress promulgated the 100:1 ratio” and “share[d] the district court’s concern about the fairness of maintaining the across-the-board sentencing gap associated with the 100:1 crack-to-powder ratio.”⁶³ But to recapitulate, said the First Circuit, “we hold that the district court erred ... when it constructed a new sentencing range based on the categorical substitution of a 20:1 crack-to-powder ratio for the 100:1 embedded in the sentencing guidelines.”⁶⁴ A panel in the Fourth Circuit agreed:

[t]he principal question ... is whether a district court in the post-Booker world can vary from the advisory sentencing range under the guidelines by substituting its own crack cocaine/powder cocaine ratio for the 100:1 crack cocaine/powder cocaine ratio chosen by Congress. For the reasons stated below, we conclude a court cannot.... [The] sentencing court must identify the individual aspects of the defendant’s case that fit within the factors listed in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a) and in reliance on those findings, impose a non-Guideline sentence that is reasonable ... in arriving at a reasonable sentence, the court simply must not rely on a factor that would result in a sentencing disparity that totally is at odds with the will of Congress.⁶⁵

⁶¹ United States v. Pho, 433 F.3d 53, 64-65 (1st Cir. 2006).

⁶² Id. at 65.

⁶³ Id.

⁶⁴ Id. at 64.

⁶⁵ United States v. Eura, 440 F.3d 625, 627, 634 (4th Cir. 2006). Among some of the district courts, United States v. Doe, 412 F.Supp.2d 87 (D.D.C. 2006), it was also observed that sentencing courts lack the authority to impose a sentence below the applicable Guidelines range solely based on perceived disparities attributable to the crack cocaine/powder cocaine sentencing differential; see also United States v. Tabor, 365 F. Supp.2d 1052 (D.Neb. 2005) (No need for a departure, said the court, under pre-Booker theory, and no reason to vary or deviate from the crack cocaine Guidelines based on defendant’s possession with intent to distribute 50 or more grams of crack cocaine, thereby making him eligible imprisonment for 10 years to life under 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)(A)); United States v. Valencia-Aguirre, 409 F.Supp.2d 1358 (M.D. Fla. 2006).

The Fourth Circuit decision formed the basis for its later unpublished opinion in Kimbrough v. United States.⁶⁶

Kimbrough v. United States

Norfolk, Virginia police arrested Derrick Kimbrough after they came upon him in the midst of what appeared to be a curbside drug sale. At the time, they discovered more than $1,900 in cash, 56 grams of crack cocaine, and more than 60 grams of powder cocaine in his car.⁶⁷ They also recovered a loaded hand gun for which Kimbrough was holding a full magazine clip.⁶⁸ Kimbrough subsequently pleaded guilty⁶⁹ to federal charges for trafficking in more than 50 grams of crack,⁷⁰ trafficking in cocaine powder,⁷¹ conspiracy to traffic in crack,⁷² and possession of a firearm during and in furtherance of a drug trafficking offense.⁷³ He faced mandatory minimum terms of imprisonment of 10 years on the crack trafficking charge and of 5 years on the gun charge.⁷⁴ The applicable sentencing guidelines called for a sentence of imprisonment in the range of 168 to 210 months on the drug charges with an additional 60 months on the gun charge (to be served consecutive to the drug charges for a range of imprisonment of 228 to 270 months).⁷⁵ Kimbrough's attorney apparently urged a departure from the Guideline's recommended sentence based on the Sentencing Commission's dissatisfaction with the 100:1 ratio, Kimbrough's military service, the absence of any prior felony conviction, his employment record, and the suggestion that federal involvement represented an instance of "sentence shopping" in what was otherwise a state case.⁷⁶

⁶⁶ 174 Fed.Appx. 798 (4th Cir. May 9, 2006), cert. granted, 127 S.Ct. 2933 (2007).

⁶⁷ Brief for the United States at 10-11, Kimbrough v. United States, No. 06-6330 (2007)(U.S. Brief).

⁶⁸ Id. at 11.

⁶⁹ 174 Fed.Appx. at 798.

⁷⁰ 21 U.S.C. § 841(a),(b)(1)(A)(iii).

⁷¹ 21 U.S.C. § 841(a),(b)(1)(C).

⁷² 21 U.S.C. §§ 846, 841(a),(b)(1)(A)(iii).

⁷³ 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(1)(A)(i).

⁷⁴ 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)(A), 18 U.S.C. § 924(c)(1)(A)(i).

⁷⁵ Kimbrough v. United States, 174 Fed.Appx. at 798-99.

⁷⁶ Brief of Petitioner at 9-10, Kimbrough v. United States, No. 06-6330 (2007)(Petitioner's Brief). As for the sentence shopping contention, drug trafficking is a crime under federal law and the laws of each of the states. Consequently, most drug offenses can be tried in either state or federal court. In United States v. Armstrong, 517 U.S. 456 (1996), the defendant argued unsuccessfully that the Constitution precluded an alleged practice under which minority crack defendants were being federally prosecuted, while similarly situated white defendants faced only less severe state prosecution. There the Court observed that a selective prosecution claimant "must demonstrate that the federal prosecution policy had a discriminatory effect and that it was motivated by a discriminatory purpose. To establish a discriminatory effect in a race case, the claimant must show that similarly situated (continued...)

Under the facts before it, the district court considered the sentence recommended by the Guidelines “ridiculous.”⁷⁷ It sentenced Kimbrough to the statutory minimum of 180 months in prison (10 years on the drug charges and 5 years on the gun charge).⁷⁸ It did so in part because of the sentencing disparity for crack and powder cocaine.⁷⁹ However, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals vacated and remanded the sentence, consistent with its holding in Eura that “a sentence that is outside the guidelines range is per se unreasonable when it is based on a disagreement with the sentencing disparity for crack and powder offenses.”⁸⁰ On June 11, 2007, the Supreme Court agreed to consider whether the district court abused its discretion when it determined that in Kimbrough’s case the sentencing range recommended by the Guidelines would be greater than necessary to serve the penological purposes described in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(2) and should not be controlling in light of the instruction in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(6) to consider the need to avoid unwarranted disparity among similarly situated defendants.⁸¹

On December 10, 2007, the Supreme Court reversed the Court of Appeals in a 7-to-2 ruling. Writing for the majority, Justice Ginsburg held that although a district judge must respectfully consider the Guidelines range as one factor (among many) in determining an appropriate sentence, the judge has discretion to depart from the Guidelines based on the disparity between the Guidelines’ treatment of crack and powder cocaine offenses.⁸² As the Booker decision had made clear that the individuals of a different race were not prosecuted.” Id. at 465. Federal crack prosecutions have apparently been particularly prevalent in the Fourth Circuit, see e.g., “Retroactivity for crack sentence cuts debated,” The National Law Journal at 4 (October 22, 2007)(citing Sentencing Commission statistics indicating that should the Commission’s recent crack cocaine amendments be made retroactive the Fourth Circuit would have almost twice as many eligible prisoners as the next highest Circuit and over nine times as many as the largest Circuit). Nevertheless, this hardly demonstrates selective prosecution. Moreover, since state sentencing practices differ from state to state, requiring compatibility of federal and state sentencing patterns within a given state would be at odds with the Guidelines’ underlying premise of uniform, nationwide federal sentencing practices.

⁷⁶ (...continued)

⁷⁷ Petitioner’s Brief at 11.

⁷⁸ Kimbrough v. United States, 174 Fed.Appx. at 799.

⁷⁹ Id. The district court apparently cited Kimbrough’s military and employment records, the fact he had no prior felony convictions, and “the court specifically relied upon the fact that ‘the Sentencing Commission has recognized that crack cocaine has not caused the damage that the Justice Department alleges it has and on its recognition of the disproportionate and unjust effect that crack cocaine guidelines have in sentencing.’” Petitioner’s Brief at 11 (internal citations omitted).

⁸⁰ Id.

⁸¹ Kimbrough v. United States, cert. granted, 127 S.Ct. 2933 (2007).

⁸² Kimbrough v. United States, 552 U.S. ___, 128 S. Ct. 558, 564 (2007). In an opinion issued on the same day as Kimbrough, the Supreme Court in Gall v. United States, 552 U.S. ___, 128 S. Ct. 586, 596 (2007) opined that while district courts must treat the Guidelines as the “starting point and the initial benchmark,” they are not the only consideration.

(continued...)

Sentencing Guidelines — which include the cocaine Guidelines — are to be advisory only, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals had erred in holding the crack/powder disparity “effectively mandatory,” the Court explained.⁸³ Furthermore, the Supreme Court concluded that the 180-month sentence imposed on Kimbrough is reasonable given the particular circumstance of Kimbrough’s case and that the district judge did not abuse his discretion in finding that the crack/powder disparity is at odds with the objectives of sentencing set forth in 18 U.S.C. § 3553(a)(2).⁸⁴

Amendment of the Sentencing Guidelines

In May, the United States Sentencing Commission submitted proposed amendments to the Guidelines (including those applicable in Kimbrough) that essentially did away with the 100:1 ratio for purposes of the Guidelines (except at the point at which the statutory mandatory minimums are triggered).⁸⁵ It also recommended that the thresholds for the statutory mandatory minimums for trafficking in crack be raised, thereby eliminating the statutory 100:1.⁸⁶ In July, the Commission proposed that the changes relating to what had been the 100:1 ratio in the Guidelines be made retroactively applicable, should they become effective on November 1, 2007, in the absence of a Congressional objection.⁸⁷ On November 1, 2007, the amendments to the Guidelines including those relating to crack and the 100:1 ratio went into effect.⁸⁸ On December 11, 2007, the Sentencing Commission unanimously voted to apply the crack amendment retroactively.⁸⁹

⁸² (...continued)

Furthermore, the Court rejected the need for requiring district judges to demonstrate that “extraordinary” circumstances justify a sentence outside the Guidelines range. Id. at 595.

⁸³ Id.

⁸⁴ Id. at 576.

⁸⁵ 72 Fed. Reg. 28558 (May 21, 2007). A change in the statutory 100:1 ratio found in 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1) would require Congressional action.

⁸⁶ United States Sentencing Commission, Report to Congress: Cocaine and Federal Sentencing Policy, p.8 (May 2007), available on November 13, 2007 at [http://www.ussc.gov/r_congress/cocaine2007.pdf].

⁸⁷ 72 Fed. Reg. 41794 (July 31, 2007). Proposed Guideline amendments submitted to Congress on or before May 1 become effective on the following November 1, unless modified or disapproved by Act of Congress. 28 U.S.C. § 994(p). A federal court may modify a sentence it has imposed to reflect a subsequently reduced sentencing range, to the extent the modification is consistent with Sentencing Commission policy statements. 18 U.S.C. § 3582(c)(2).

⁸⁸ United States Sentencing Commission, Guidelines Manual (November 1, 2007), available on November 13, 2003 at [<http://www.ussc.gov/2007guid/GL2007.pdf>].

⁸⁹ U.S. Sentencing Commission, News Release: U.S. Sentencing Commission Votes Unanimously to Apply Amendment Retroactively for Crack Cocaine Offenses, Dec. 11, 2007, available at [<http://www.ussc.gov/PRESS/re1121107.htm>].

As noted earlier,⁹⁰ the Controlled Substances Act makes trafficking in 5 to 50 grams of crack cocaine or 500 to 5,000 grams of cocaine powder punishable by imprisonment for not less than 5 years and not more than 40 years.⁹¹ It makes trafficking more than 50 grams of crack or more than 5,000 grams of cocaine powder punishable by imprisonment for not less than 10 years and not more than life.⁹² These sanctions, like most federal criminal penalties, are reflected in the Sentencing Guidelines. The Guidelines assign most federal crimes to an individual guideline which in turn assigns the offense an initial base sentencing level. Drug trafficking offenses, for example, have been assigned to section 2D1.1, which sets the base offense level according to the amount of crack or powder cocaine involved in a particular case.⁹³ Levels are then added or subtracted on the basis of any aggravating or mitigating factors presented in a particular defendant's case. For example, a defendant's offense level may be decreased by 2 or 4 levels, if the offense involved a number of participants and the defendant's role in the offense was minor or minimal.⁹⁴ A defendant's final offense level and his criminal history (criminal record) govern the sentence recommended by the Guidelines.⁹⁵ The Guidelines assign sentencing ranges for each of the 43 possible final offense levels.⁹⁶ Each of the 43 has a series of six escalating sentencing ranges to mirror the extent of the defendant's criminal history.⁹⁷ For example, if a defendant has no prior criminal record and his final sentencing level is 26, the Guidelines recommend that the sentencing court impose a term of imprisonment somewhere between 63 and 78 months; at the other extreme, if a defendant has an extensive prior criminal record and his final sentencing level is the same 26, the Guidelines recommend a sentencing range of between 120 to 150 months.⁹⁸

The drug quantity table that is part of the drug sentencing guideline, U.S.S.G. §2D1.1(c), assigns offenses to one of several steps with corresponding sentencing levels based on the kind and volume of the controlled substances involved in the offense.⁹⁹ For example, an offense involving 150 KG or more of powder cocaine is assigned a step (1) offense level of 38, while an offense involving less than 25 grams

⁹⁰ Supra n.13.

⁹¹ 21 U.S.C. 841(b)(1)(B)(ii), (iii).

⁹² 21 U.S.C. 841(b)(1)(A)(ii), (iii).

⁹³ U.S.S.G. §2D1.1(c)(Drug Quantity Table)(November 1, 2007).

⁹⁴ U.S.S.G. §3B1.2 (November 1, 2007).

⁹⁵ U.S.S.G. §1B1.1 (November 1, 2007).

⁹⁶ U.S.S.G. ch.5A (Sentencing Table) (November 1, 2007).

⁹⁷ Id.

⁹⁸ Id. A defendant's criminal history score is separately calculated, U.S.S.G. ch.4, and scores correspond to 1 of the 6 sentencing ranges assigned to each final offense level. In the case of offense level 26, for instance, the sentencing range for a defendant with an extensive criminal record (13 or more criminal history points) is 120 to 150 months rather than the 63 to 78 months for a first time offender. Id.

⁹⁹ U.S.S.G. §2D1.1(c)(November 1, 2007).

is assigned a step (14) offense level of 12.¹⁰⁰ Prior to the amendments effective on November 1, 2007, each of the steps reflected a 100:1 ratio between crack and powder cocaine; for instance, offenses involving either more than 150 KG of powder cocaine or more than 1.5 KG of crack cocaine were each assigned a step (1) offense level of 38.¹⁰¹ In order to reduce the prospect of a Guideline result beneath the statutory minimums, the pre-amendment Guidelines assigned the 5-year-minimum-triggering 5G(crack)/500G(powder) offenses to U.S.S.G. §2D1.1(c), step (7), with an offense level of 26 which translated to a sentencing range of from 5 years and 3 months (63 months) to 6 years and 6 months (78 months).¹⁰² It made a similar assignment for the 10-year mandatory minimum offenses involving 50 grams of crack or 5,000 grams of powder cocaine: level 32 with a sentencing range for first offenders of from 10 year and 1 month (121 months) to 12 years and 7 months (151 months).¹⁰³

The Commission's amendments focused first on the assignment for crack offenses subject to a mandatory minimum. The Commission noted that its earlier assignment set the bottom of the two ranges higher than necessary to satisfy minimum sentencing requirements (5 years and 3 months in the case of 5 grams; 10 years and 1 month in the case of 50 grams).¹⁰⁴ Its amendments reassign those offenses to offense levels where the mandatory minimum fell within the middle of the ranges, that is, to offense level 24 (51 to 63 months for first offenders) and offense level 30 (97 to 121 months for first offenders) for 5 and 50-gram crack offenses, respectively.¹⁰⁵ They then provide a similar two level reduction for crack offenses involving amounts above and beyond those that trigger the mandatory minimums.¹⁰⁶ The amendments, however, make no such changes in the offense levels to which powder cocaine offenses are assigned. As a consequence, the 100:1

¹⁰⁰ Id.

¹⁰¹ U.S.S.G. §2D1.1(c)(1)(November 1, 2006).

¹⁰² U.S.S.G. §2D1.1(c), ch.5A (Sentencing Table) (November 1, 2006).

¹⁰³ Id.

¹⁰⁴ “The drug quantity thresholds in the Drug Quantity Table are set so as to provide base offense levels corresponding to guideline ranges that are above the statutory mandatory minimum penalties. Accordingly, offenses involving 5 grams or more of crack cocaine were assigned a base offense level (level 26) corresponding to a sentencing guideline range of 63 to 78 months from a defendant in criminal History Category I (a guideline range that exceeds the five-year statutory minimum for such offenses by at least three months. . . .” United States Sentencing Commission, Amendments to the Sentencing Guidelines, p.66 (May 11, 2007)(emphasis in the original); 72 Fed. Reg. 28573 (May 21, 2007).

¹⁰⁵ “This amendment modifies the drug quantity thresholds in the Drug Quantity Table so as to assign, for crack cocaine offenses, base offense levels corresponding to guideline ranges that include the statutory mandatory minimum penalties. Accordingly, pursuant to the amendment, 5 grams of cocaine base are assigned a base offense level of 24 (51 to 63 months at Criminal History Category I, which includes the five-year (60 month) statutory minimum for such offenses). . . .” United States Sentencing Commission, Amendments to the Sentencing Guidelines, p.66 (May 11, 2007)(emphasis in the original); 72 Fed. Reg. 28573 (May 21, 2007).

¹⁰⁶ Id.

ratio has disappeared from the Guidelines (although the statutory 100:1 ratio in the quantities of powder cocaine and crack cocaine that trigger the mandatory minimum penalties still remains).¹⁰⁷

Retroactivity Decision. In July 2007, the Commission proposed that the amendment be made retroactively applicable to previously sentenced crack cocaine offenders.¹⁰⁸ After receiving public comment on the issue of retroactivity¹⁰⁹ and holding public hearings to consider the issue,¹¹⁰ the Commission voted 7-to-0 in favor of retroactivity on December 11, 2007. While the Commission found “that the statutory purposes of sentencing are best served by retroactive application of the amendment,” it emphasized that not all previously sentenced crack cocaine offenders will automatically receive a reduction in sentence — rather, federal sentencing judges will have the final authority to make that determination based on the merits of each case, after considering a variety of factors, including whether public safety would be endangered by early release of the prisoner.¹¹¹ To allow courts time to prepare for the motions that will be filed for such sentence reductions, the Commission elected to delay the effective date of its decision on retroactivity until March 3, 2008.¹¹²

Legislative Solutions

109th Congress. On April 6, 2005, three months after the Supreme Court’s decision in Booker, House Judiciary Committee Chairman Sensenbrenner introduced H.R. 1528, 109th Congress, first session, entitled “Defending America’s Most Vulnerable: Safe Access to Drug Treatment and Child Protection Act of 2005.”¹¹³ Section 12 of the bill embodies the view that the Guidelines provide the best cure for sentencing disparity and that departures only enhance the risk of unwarranted disparity. It would have essentially forbidden judicial consideration of almost all mitigating factors as a basis for sentencing below guideline ranges. Section 12 also proposed procedural restrictions on other remaining grounds for downward departure

¹⁰⁷ The existing ratio varies from step to step ranging from 25:1 to 80:1. The cocaine changes that the amendment made to the Drug Quantity Table are appended below.

¹⁰⁸ 72 Fed. Reg. 41,794 (July 31, 2007).

¹⁰⁹ Opinions were received from a variety of parties, including the judiciary, the executive branch, interested organizations, members of the defense bar, and individual citizens. These public comment letters are available at [http://www.ussc.gov/pubcom_Retro/PC200711.htm].

¹¹⁰ A transcript of the public hearing, held by the Commission on November 13, 2007, is available at [http://www.ussc.gov/hearings/11_13_07/Transcript111307.pdf].

¹¹¹ U.S. Sentencing Commission, News Release: U.S. Sentencing Commission Votes Unanimously to Apply Amendment Retroactively for Crack Cocaine Offenses, Dec. 11, 2007, available at [<http://www.ussc.gov/PRESS/rel121107.htm>].

¹¹² Id.

¹¹³ H.R. 1528, 109th Cong., 1st sess., 151 Cong. Rec. H1845 (2005). On April 12, 2005, hearings were held on H.R. 1528 by the House Judiciary Committee, Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism and Homeland Security.

from the Guidelines, except for departures based on a prosecutor's motion for an early plea agreement or substantial assistance in the prosecution of others.

On January 4, 2005, Representative Roscoe Bartlett introduced H.R. 48, Powder-Crack Cocaine Penalty Equalization Act of 2005,¹¹⁴ to equalize the triggering quantity for the mandatory minimum sentences for cocaine offenses at the crack cocaine levels (5 grams of powder cocaine would result in a five-year sentence and 50 grams a 10-year sentence). Currently, it takes 100 times those quantities to trigger the 5- and 10-year sentences for powder cocaine.

On May 3, 2005, Representative Charles Rangel introduced H.R. 2456, Crack-Cocaine Equitable Sentencing Act of 2005, to amend the Controlled Substances Act and the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act. The bill would have eliminated certain mandatory minimum penalties relating to crack cocaine offenses. It would have also treated 50 grams of crack the same as 50 grams of other forms of cocaine; and 5 grams of crack the same as 5 grams of other forms of cocaine.

110th Congress. Congressmen Bartlett and Rangel have reintroduced their bills as H.R. 79 (Powder-Crack Cocaine Penalty Equalization Act of 2007) and H.R. 460 (Crack-Cocaine Equitable Sentencing Act of 2007), respectively.

Senator Sessions introduced S. 1383 (Drug Sentencing Reform Act of 2007) which would change the statutory crack-powder cocaine ratio to 20:1 for purposes of both the 5 and 10-year mandatory minimums (establishing thresholds of 20 grams (crack)/ 400 grams (powder) and 200 grams (crack)/ 4 kilograms (powder), respectively). The bill would call for a 2 to 8 offense level increase for any drug trafficking offense that involves threats, violence, or the use of firearm. It would also set a ceiling at level 32 for any drug trafficking offense in which the offender had a minimal role. It would lower the simple possession of crack cocaine mandatory minimum sentence from five years to one year.

S. 1685 (Fairness in Drug Sentencing Act of 2007), introduced by Senator Hatch, would raise the crack threshold to 25 grams for the 5-year mandatory minimum, and 250 grams of crack for the 10-year mandatory minimum threshold, resulting in a statutory crack-powder cocaine ratio of 20:1. The bill also would eliminate the five-year mandatory minimum for simple possession of crack cocaine. The bill would also call upon the Sentencing Commission to reexamine the weight given aggravating factors in drug trafficking cases.

The Drug Sentencing Reform and Cocaine Kingpin Trafficking Act of 2007, S. 1711 and H.R. 4545 (introduced by Senator Biden and Representative Jackson-Lee, respectively), would eliminate the statutory 100:1 ratio in cocaine cases by raising the crack cocaine threshold to 500 grams and 5 kilograms for the 5- and 10-year mandatory minimums, respectively. It would call upon the Sentencing Commission to reexamine the weight given aggravating and mitigating factors in drug trafficking cases. It also would eliminate the five-year mandatory minimum for simple possession of crack cocaine. In addition, the bill would increase fines for significant drug trafficking offenses, authorize funding for prison- and jail-based drug treatment programs, and authorize increased resources for the Departments of Justice, Treasury, and Homeland Security.

¹¹⁴ H.R. 48, 109th Cong., 1st sess., 151 Cong. Rec. H71 (2005) (Related bill: H.R. 1501, 109th Cong., 1st sess.).

Congressman Bobby Scott introduced H.R. 5035, the Fairness in Cocaine Sentencing Act of 2008, which would amend the Controlled Substances Act and the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act. The bill would treat 50 grams of crack the same as 50 grams of other forms of cocaine; 5 grams of crack the same as 5 grams of other forms of cocaine, and would eliminate mandatory minimum penalties relating to cocaine offenses. The bill also would reestablish the possibility of parole for cocaine offenders. Finally, the bill would authorize $10,000,000 for each fiscal year from 2009 through 2013 for a federal drug court program, and $50,000,000 for each of those fiscal years for the existing Drug Court Discretionary Grant Program (42 U.S.C. § 3797u).

H.R. 4842, introduced by Representative Lamar Smith, is concerned solely with the Sentencing Commission's decision to make the crack cocaine amendment retroactive. The bill would provide for only prospective effect of the amendment.

Appendix

Drug Quantity Table (Before and After Amendment).

Controlled Substance and Quantity	Base Offense Level
(1) * * * <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • 150 KG or more of Cocaine • 1.5 4.5 KG or more of Cocaine Base * * *	Level 38
(2) * * * <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 50 KG but not less than 150 KG of Cocaine • At least 500 G 1.5 G but not less than 1.5 4.5 KG of Cocaine Base * * *	Level 36
(3) * * * <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 15 KG but not less than 50 KG of Cocaine • At least 150 500 G not less than 500 G 1.5 KG of Cocaine Base * * *	Level 34
(4) * * * <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 5 KG but not less than 15 KG of Cocaine • At least 50 150 G not less than 150 500 G of Cocaine Base * * *	Level 32
(5) * * * <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 3.5 KG but not less than 5 KG of Cocaine • At least 35 50 G not less than 50 150 G of Cocaine Base * * *	Level 30
(6) * * * <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 2 KG but not less than 3.5 KG of Cocaine • At least 20 35 G not less than 35 50 G of Cocaine Base * * *	Level 28
(7) * * * <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 500 G but not less than 2 KG of Cocaine • At least 5 20 G not less than 20 35 G of Cocaine Base * * *	Level 26
(8) * * * <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 400 G but not less than 500 G of Cocaine • At least 4 5 G not less than 5 20 G of Cocaine Base * * *	Level 24
(9) * * * <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • At least 300 G but not less than 400 G of Cocaine • At least 3 4 G not less than 4 5 G of Cocaine Base * * *	Level 22

CRS-21

- (10) * * * Level 20
- At least 200 G but not less than 300 G of Cocaine
 - At least ~~2~~ 3 G not less than ~~3~~ 4 G of Cocaine Base
- * * *
- (11) * * * Level 18
- At least 100 G but not less than 200 G of Cocaine
 - At least ~~1~~ 2 G not less than ~~2~~ 3 G of Cocaine Base
- * * *
- (12) * * * Level 16
- At least 50 G but not less than 100 G of Cocaine
 - At least ~~500 MG~~ 1 G not less than ~~1~~ 2 G of Cocaine Base
- * * *
- (13) * * * Level 14
- At least 25 G but not less than 50 G of Cocaine
 - At least ~~250~~ 500 MG not less than ~~500 MG~~ 1 G of Cocaine Base
- * * *
- (14) * * * Level 12
- At least 25 G of Cocaine
 - At least ~~250~~ 500 MG of Cocaine Base
- * * *