

Congressional Research Service

Informing the legislative debate since 1914

---

Procedural Analysis of Private Laws Enacted: 1986-2015

name redacted

Analyst on Congress and the Legislative Process

August 31, 2015

Congressional Research Service

7-....

www.crs.gov

RS22450

Summary

Between 1986 and 2015 (99th-114th Congresses), 170 private laws were enacted. As of this writing, no private laws have been enacted in the 114th Congress (2015-2016). Most private laws during this period dealt with immigration issues or claims against the government. Of these measures, 65% originated in the House, 9% had cosponsors, and 23% had companion bills. Most were enacted without amendment or need to resolve differences with the other house. This report examines the broad distinctions among these measures in terms of their subject matter, introduction, sponsorship and cosponsorship, referral, method of consideration, amendment, and reconciling of differences between the chambers' versions of the bill.

This report will be updated as necessary.

Contents

Introduction .....	1
Subject Matter of Private Laws .....	1
Introduction Stage: Chamber of Origin .....	2
Committee Referral .....	2
Party Sponsorship.....	3
Geographic Sponsorship .....	4
Cosponsors .....	4
Companion Bills.....	5
Method of Consideration.....	5
House .....	5
Senate .....	5
Bills Passed Over in the House .....	5
Amendments to Private Bills.....	5
House .....	6
Senate .....	6
Resolving Differences .....	6
Time to Enactment.....	6

Figures

Figure 1. Subject of Private Laws: 1986-2015.....	2
Figure 2. House Committee Referrals for Private Bills Enacted, 1986-2015.....	3
Figure 3. Senate Committee Referrals for Private Bills Enacted, 1986-2015 .....	3

Tables

Table 1. Party Sponsorship of Private Laws: 1986-2015 .....	4
---	---

Contacts

Author Contact Information .....	7
----------------------------------	---

Introduction

Unlike public law, which applies to public matters and deals with individuals only by classes, the provisions of private law apply to “one or several specified persons, corporations, [or] institutions.”<sup>1</sup> Private legislation is premised on the idea that general law cannot cover all situations equitably, and sometimes Congress must approve legislation to address unique problems that public law either created or overlooked. Private legislation has its foundation in the right to “petition the government for a redress of grievances”<sup>2</sup> guaranteed to all citizens by the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. While once much more common, in modern practice private laws are rare and designed to grant relief in those few situations where no other legal or administrative remedies are available to a petitioner.

Between 1986 and 2015 (99th-114th Congresses), 170 private laws were enacted. This report examines the broad distinctions that appear among these 170 measures in terms of their subject matter, introduction, sponsorship and cosponsorship, referral, method of consideration in each chamber, amendment, and ways in which any differences between the chambers’ versions of the bill were reconciled. No private laws were enacted in the 113th Congress (2013-2014) and, as of this writing, none has been enacted in the 114th Congress (2015-2016).

Subject Matter of Private Laws

As Figure 1 demonstrates, from 1986 to 2015, the subject matter of private laws enacted fell into five broad categories. The largest subject category, immigration, is composed primarily of measures that confer lawful permanent resident status on a petitioner “by waiving a general law provision which prevents the granting or maintenance” of such status.<sup>3</sup> The second category includes a broad variety of claims against the government. The remaining private laws during the period studied are divided among three smaller categories: the conveyance of public lands, civil service issues, and vessel documentation.

---

<sup>1</sup> Asher C. Hinds, Hinds’ Precedents of the House of Representatives of the United States (Washington: GPO, 1917), vol. 4, §3285.

<sup>2</sup> U.S. Congress, House, Constitution, Jefferson’s Manual, and Rules of the House of Representatives, H.Doc. 113-181, 113th Cong., 2nd sess. (Washington: GPO, 2015), §208.

<sup>3</sup> For a discussion of private immigration measures, see CRS Report RL33024, Private Immigration Legislation, by (name redacted)

Figure 1. Subject of Private Laws: 1986-2015

Source: Legislation Information System (LIS).

Introduction Stage: Chamber of Origin

Of the 170 private laws enacted between 1986 and 2015, 59 (35%) originated in the Senate, and 111 (65%) originated in the House of Representatives.

Committee Referral

Historically, most private legislation introduced in Congress was considered either by various claims committees established in each chamber<sup>4</sup> or by committees overseeing immigration.<sup>5</sup> The 1946 Legislative Reorganization Act,<sup>6</sup> however, transferred jurisdiction over both immigration and claims bills to the Committees on the Judiciary. Since 1947, only a small fraction of private measures dealing with matters such as public lands, vessel documentation, military awards, veterans' benefits, and tax and tariffs have been referred to committees other than the Committees on the Judiciary.

As Figure 2 and Figure 3 demonstrate, while other committees have been referred and a small percentage of private measures subsequently enacted, the House and Senate Judiciary Committees have processed the largest percentage of private laws over the past 20 years. Five bills were referred to more than one Senate committee and were counted multiple times in the corresponding table. (For purposes of clarity, the table identifies the relevant House and Senate committees by their current name and jurisdiction, even if some might have had different names or jurisdiction at various points over the period studied.)

<sup>4</sup> David T. Canon, Garrison Nelson, Charles Stewart III, Committees in the U.S. Congress, 1789-1946, vol. 1 (Washington: CQ Press, 2002), pp. VI-XXXV.

<sup>5</sup> U.S. Congress, House Committee on the Judiciary, History of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, committee print, 92nd Cong. 2nd sess. (Washington: GPO, 1972), p. 5.

<sup>6</sup> P.L. 79-601, 60 Stat. 812.

Figure 2. House Committee Referrals for Private Bills Enacted, 1986-2015

Source: Legislation Information System (LIS).

Figure 3. Senate Committee Referrals for Private Bills Enacted, 1986-2015

Source: Legislation Information System (LIS).

Party Sponsorship

It is generally accepted that Congress acts on significantly more measures sponsored by majority party members than by minority party members. For example, between 1987 and 2004, 71% to

88% of the measures passing the House under the Suspension of the Rules procedure were authored by majority party members.<sup>7</sup>

An examination of the 170 private laws enacted since the 99th Congress, however, reveals a more balanced breakdown by party affiliation. Over the two decade period, 73 private laws were sponsored by Republican Members of Congress and 97 by Democratic Members. As Table 1 shows, both parties sponsored substantial percentages of private bills that became law. This is true not only during periods of split party control of Congress but also during times when one party held the majority in both chambers.

Table 1. Party Sponsorship of Private Laws: 1986-2015

Congressional Majority	Republican-Sponsored Private Laws	Democratic-Sponsored Private Laws
Democratic	38%	62%
Republican	56%	44%
Chambers Split	43%	57%

Source: Legislation Information System (LIS).

The data suggest that party membership is not the exclusive factor in determining whether a private measure is successful or not. Table 1 tends to show higher proportions of measures both for Democratic in comparison with Republican majorities and for Democratic in comparison with Republican minorities. This effect, however, may arise simply because, during the period studied, both the Democratic majorities and minorities that occurred tended to be larger than the corresponding Republican ones.

Geographic Sponsorship

The geographic distribution of the sponsorship of private laws from the 99th through the 114th Congress reveals, not surprisingly, that Members from the most populous states collectively authored the most private laws. The nation’s four most populous states—California, Texas, New York, and Florida<sup>8</sup>—were also the top four states in which Members sponsored private laws during this period. However, Members from Alaska and Wyoming—the 47th- and 50th-ranked states in population—each sponsored four private laws, more than Members from significantly larger states, such as Ohio, Illinois, and New Jersey. These data suggest that the state or region of a sponsor is not a major factor in whether a private measure is enacted.

Cosponsors

Under House Rule XIII, private bills may not be cosponsored.<sup>9</sup> Notwithstanding this prohibition, one House measure that subsequently became law in the period examined did have cosponsors.<sup>10</sup> The Senate places no limits on the cosponsorship of private measures. Of the 170 private laws examined, 15 Senate bills had cosponsors.

<sup>7</sup> CRS Report 97-901, Suspension of Rules in the House: Measure Sponsorship by Party, by (name redacted)

<sup>8</sup> U.S. Census Bureau, 2006 Population Estimates, <http://www.census.gov/popest/estimates.php>.

<sup>9</sup> William Holmes Brown, Charles W. Johnson, and John V. Sullivan, House Practice: A Guide to the Rules, Precedents and Procedures of the House (Washington: GPO, 2011), ch. 6, §15, p. 179.

<sup>10</sup> H.R. 2032, 100th Congress.

Companion Bills

Just 23% of the 170 bills that became private laws enacted between 1986 and 2015 had companion measures introduced in the other chamber during the Congress they were enacted. This, along with the cosponsorship statistics noted above, suggests that, in contrast with public policy measures, private bills' sponsors view it as less necessary to build formal coalitions in advance in support of passage of a private measure, perhaps because the measure will be judged on the merit of the specific case at hand and the relatively narrow precedents governing which requests for relief are acted upon.

Method of Consideration

House

The House has special procedures for considering private measures through a call of its Private Calendar.<sup>11</sup> Of the 170 private laws enacted between the 99th and 114th Congresses, 151 were considered under these procedures. Eleven bills were considered by unanimous consent; seven were considered under the Suspension of the Rules procedure; and one passed under the call of the Consent Calendar (a procedure that has since been abolished.)

Senate

Unlike the House, the Senate does not have unique procedures for the consideration of private measures; they are dealt with in the same way as public bills. All 170 private measures enacted between the 99th and 114th Congress were considered in the Senate by unanimous consent.

Bills Passed Over in the House

In the House, on the special days set aside for the call of the Private Calendar, bills are acted upon in the order listed on the calendar. A bill may be, by unanimous consent, passed over "without prejudice," however, meaning that it does not lose its place on the calendar even though it is not being acted upon at the time.<sup>12</sup> Of the private laws examined, seven were passed over at least once before finally gaining House passage. One private claims bill, H.R. 1598 from the 99th Congress, was passed over without prejudice 16 times before being approved by the House.<sup>13</sup>

Amendments to Private Bills

As with public legislation, committees of jurisdiction exercise judgment not only over whether a private bill merits consideration by their chamber but also over the content of the bill. Simply put, committees do not always accept the remedy suggested by the author of an introduced private measure. As such, private bills are sometimes amended in committee or on the floor.

---

<sup>11</sup> See CRS Report 98-628, Private Bills: Procedure in the House, by (name redacted).

<sup>12</sup> Deschler's Precedents of the U.S. House of Representatives (Washington: GPO, 1977), ch. 22 §12.4-12.6.

<sup>13</sup> News reports suggest that House consideration was likely delayed while bill supporters worked to convince the President to withdraw a veto threat of the measure. See James Hannah, "Law Helps Ohio Man, Deformed at Birth, Seek Damages," Associated Press, October 22, 1986.

House

Of the 170 private laws enacted between 1986 and 2015:

- 11 were reported from House committee with an amendment in the nature of a substitute;
- 25 were reported from committee with perfecting amendments; and
- 12 were amended on the House floor.

Senate

Of the 170 private laws enacted between 1986 and 2015:

- 10 were reported from Senate committee with an amendment in the nature of a substitute;
- 2 were reported from Senate committee with perfecting amendments; and
- 15 private bills were amended on the Senate floor.

Resolving Differences

Only 13% of the private laws enacted between 1986 and 2015 were amended by the second chamber, thus requiring the two chambers to resolve differences. Of this 13%, none was resolved by conference committee. In every instance, an exchange of amendments (“ping-ponging” the bill) between the House and Senate was used to come into agreement.

Time to Enactment

Like public bills, a private bill must be enacted within the Congress in which it was introduced, and if it is not adopted by adjournment, it dies and must be reintroduced in the next Congress. This often happens in private bill cases in which the time for Congress to deal with a particular case may be longer than a single Congress. Between 1986 and 2015, the average time from the first introduction of private legislation in Congress requesting relief to resolution of the case by enactment of a private law was over two years.

During the same period, the longest case took more than 8,934 days—more than 24 years—from the first introduction of a private bill to enactment of a private law resolving the claim.<sup>14</sup> The shortest time from first introduction of a private bill to enactment of a law resolving the case was 29 days.<sup>15</sup>

---

<sup>14</sup> See S. 2042, 108th Congress.

<sup>15</sup> See H.R. 2731 and H.R. 2732, 105th Congress.

Author Contact Information

(name redacted)

Analyst on Congress and the Legislative Process

[redacted]@crs.loc.gov, 7-....

EveryCRSReport.com

The Congressional Research Service (CRS) is a federal legislative branch agency, housed inside the Library of Congress, charged with providing the United States Congress non-partisan advice on issues that may come before Congress.

EveryCRSReport.com republishes CRS reports that are available to all Congressional staff. The reports are not classified, and Members of Congress routinely make individual reports available to the public.

Prior to our republication, we redacted names, phone numbers and email addresses of analysts who produced the reports. We also added this page to the report. We have not intentionally made any other changes to any report published on EveryCRSReport.com.

CRS reports, as a work of the United States government, are not subject to copyright protection in the United States. Any CRS report may be reproduced and distributed in its entirety without permission from CRS. However, as a CRS report may include copyrighted images or material from a third party, you may need to obtain permission of the copyright holder if you wish to copy or otherwise use copyrighted material.

Information in a CRS report should not be relied upon for purposes other than public understanding of information that has been provided by CRS to members of Congress in connection with CRS' institutional role.

EveryCRSReport.com is not a government website and is not affiliated with CRS. We do not claim copyright on any CRS report we have republished.