Summary

Funding in annual appropriations acts is for a designated fiscal year unless otherwise specified. Federal agencies that receive funds in those acts may obligate the funds during a period that starts at the beginning of that fiscal year, except where funds are made available for obligation over a different time period (such as one that begins after the start of the fiscal year). Three types of alternate periods are discussed in this report: “advance appropriations,” “forward funding,” and “advance funding.”

Advance appropriations become available for obligation one or more fiscal years after the budget year covered by the appropriations act. Although advance appropriations are provided in order to manage specific planning concerns, they also have implications for the prevention of funding gaps and the avoidance of continuing appropriations for those programs. Advance appropriations are usually enacted at an interval of one fiscal year prior to when such appropriations become available. For accounts that receive advance appropriations, the amount of budget authority that will become available once the fiscal year commences is sometimes adjusted in subsequent appropriations acts through supplemental appropriations or rescissions.

Forward funding becomes available beginning late in the budget year and is carried into at least one following fiscal year. Its main purpose is to facilitate obligations during the summer months for certain programs at the Department of Education and Department of Labor that start their activities during the fall. Forward funds tend to become available at an interval that starts on July 1 and may be obligated during at least two fiscal years. This funding schedule is usually combined with annual or advance appropriations so that only the portion of the program that requires summer obligations is funded in this manner.

Advance funding is additional authority that becomes available late in the budget year; any use of the advance funds authority is charged to the following fiscal year’s appropriation. This authority generally has been provided to accounts that fund mandatory payments to individuals. This is because the aggregate amount of such payments may be particularly sensitive to changes in eligible beneficiaries or difficult to predict more than a year in advance. In such instances, providing extra funds that become available late in the fiscal year might lessen or eliminate the potential for a funding shortfall and the need for separate supplemental appropriations. In the two cases where advance funds are currently provided, they are available only during the final weeks of the fiscal year.

Choosing an alternate period of availability for funding may have budget process implications due to the scorekeeping rules that govern the fiscal year to which such funds are attributed. Generally, advance appropriations are scored as new budget authority for the fiscal year in which the funds become available for obligation, not when the appropriations are enacted. Congress has imposed limits on both the overall level of discretionary appropriations available for a fiscal year (through statutory spending caps under the Budget Control Act) and on the level of advance appropriations that may be enacted for a given year (through points of order established in budget resolutions or House rules). In certain circumstances, making funds available for an alternate period may also violate House and Senate rules that prohibit unauthorized appropriations and other types of legislative provisions.

Introduction

The annual appropriations process provides agencies with the authority to obligate federal funds for specified purposes, and subsequently expend those funds.¹ The funding is available for obligation during a single fiscal year, unless otherwise specified.² This period of availability most often begins on the first day of the fiscal year of the appropriations act (October 1), also referred to as the “budget year.” For example, appropriations provided by the FY2019 Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act (Division B of P.L. 115-245), which was enacted on September 29, 2018, were generally expected to be available for obligation and expenditure on October 1, 2018, the first day of FY2019, and remain available through September 30, 2019.³

However, Congress may choose to provide for an alternate period of availability that begins after the start of the fiscal year, or even during a future fiscal year.⁴ The two primary alternate periods in current use are “advance appropriations” and “forward funding.” Advance appropriations become available for obligation starting at least one fiscal year after the budget year.⁵ Forward funding becomes available beginning late in the budget year and is carried into at least one following fiscal year.⁶ (Advance appropriations and forward funding, as compared to annual appropriations, are illustrated in Figure 1.)

A third alternate period of availability, which is in much less frequent use, is “advance funding.” Advance funding is the authority to make obligations late in the budget year that will be charged to the following fiscal year’s appropriation (once enacted).⁷ Advance funding differs from advance appropriations, which become available at some point after the budget year has ended, because advance funds are available only during the budget year. Advance funding also differs from forward funds, which are available into at least one following fiscal year, because advance funds expire once the budget year ends.⁸

² Funds may also be made available for more than one year (“multi-year” funds) or without fiscal year limitation (“no year” funds). For further information on the appropriations process, see CRS Report R42388, The Congressional Appropriations Process: An Introduction.

³ P.L. 109-289 is an example of an appropriations act that was enacted prior to the beginning of the fiscal year.

⁴ The annual appropriations process both controls and funds discretionary spending. It also provides budget authority to finance “appropriated mandatory” or “appropriated entitlement” spending. For further information, see CRS Report R44582, Overview of Funding Mechanisms in the Federal Budget Process, and Selected Examples.

⁸ Advance funding is also unique when compared to the other schedules discussed in this report in the requirement that expenditures of such funds be deducted from the succeeding fiscal year’s appropriation.

Notes: Although advance appropriations and forward funding are each discrete concepts, they both tend to have some degree of variation in how they are implemented, including how far in advance of the budget year funding is provided and the duration of availability for those funds. For example, advance appropriations may be provided one or two fiscal years prior to when they become available for obligation and be available during a single fiscal year or multiple fiscal years or with no fiscal year limitation. In addition, a program may receive funds on a combination of timetables, which is not illustrated in this figure.

Alternate periods of availability typically are used to meet specific budgetary needs related to a program's purpose or structure. One of the primary reasons for this type of schedule is to prevent a funding shortfall late in the fiscal year or a funding gap⁹ in the following fiscal year.¹⁰ While these reasons may be broadly applicable to all programs funded through the annual appropriations process, the comparably small number of programs that receive this type of funding tend to be entitlements, serve vulnerable populations, or have a large number of beneficiaries. For example, portions of the Medicaid program, the Veterans Health Administration (VHA), and Department of Education formula grants are funded in this manner.¹¹

Most typically, the statutory authority for a program's alternate period of availability derives from how the appropriation is structured. In some cases, however, it may be preceded by provisions in the authorizing law.¹² A program's authorizing statute may specifically address such a period of

¹⁰ These and other reasons for providing funds for a delayed period of availability have been noted by both Congress and the executive branch. See, for example, U.S. Congress, Conference Committee, Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 2001, conference report to accompany H.Con.Res. 290, 106th Cong., 2nd sess., H.Rept. 106-577 (Washington, DC: GPO, 2000), p. 72; Executive Office of the President, Office of Management and Budget (OMB), Budget of the U.S. Government, Analytical Perspectives, Fiscal Year 2014, H.Doc.113-3, 113th Cong., 1st sess. (Washington, DC: GPO, 2013), pp. 156-157.

¹² An authorization may generally be described as a statutory provision that defines the authority of the government to act. It can establish or continue a federal agency, program, policy, project, or activity. Further, it may establish policies and restrictions and deal with organizational and administrative matters. It also (implicitly or explicitly) authorizes subsequent congressional action to provide appropriations. For further information, see CRS Report R42098, Authorization of Appropriations: Procedural and Legal Issues.

availability in the authorization of appropriations¹³ or address it more generally in the provisions that govern the program.¹⁴ If the authorizing statute itself does not suggest an alternate schedule for the funds, the legislative history associated with that statute could anticipate that such funds will be provided.¹⁵ However, Congress may decide to use an alternate period of availability during the annual appropriations process even if the program’s authorization or associated legislative history is silent as to timing of future funds or only authorizes a schedule that is aligned with the budget year. In addition, even when the authorization anticipates that funds will be available for an alternate period, appropriations may subsequently be provided on a schedule that is aligned with the budget year.¹⁶ In either instance, the period of availability specified in the appropriations act is controlling.

This report examines a variety of issues associated with the alternate periods of funding availability described above. The following three sections discuss the origins, relevant budgetary concepts, and practices associated with advance appropriations, forward funding, and advance funding. (Unless otherwise noted, all examples are drawn from FY2019 appropriations acts.) The fourth section explains the budget process implications that are associated with these funding approaches. The scope of this report is generally restricted to an analysis of advance appropriations, forward funding, and advance funding in the context of the annual appropriations process. The program-specific considerations and potential consequences of these funding approaches are not discussed. For information on particular programs, see the CRS reports on those issue areas.

Advance Appropriations

Advance appropriated budget authority becomes available one or more fiscal years after the budget year covered by the appropriations act.¹⁷ For example, in an appropriations act for FY2020, funds would generally become available for obligation on October 1, 2019. Advance appropriations in the FY2020 act would not become available until the start of FY2021 or later.

According to the Congressional Budget Office (CBO), advance appropriations were first provided in 1962 for grants-in-aid that funded airport construction. Other early uses included grants for urban renewal and the Department of Education.¹⁸ Currently, this period of availability is used for a wide variety of programs funded by discretionary or appropriated mandatory spending.¹⁹

¹³ See, for example, 31 U.S.C. 117, which authorizes appropriations for certain VHA accounts.

¹⁴ See, for example, 20 U.S.C. 1223(a), which is a general statutory provision governing certain federal education programs.

¹⁸ Congressional Budget Office (CBO), “A History of the Use of Advance Appropriations,” in Advance Budgeting: A Report to the Congress, March 1977, pp. 75-82.

¹⁹ See footnote 4 for a discussion of these terms.

One salient implication of advance appropriations relates to funding gaps.²⁰ The congressional budget process currently requires that annual appropriations be available for a single fiscal year, which means that new appropriations must be enacted by the beginning of the fiscal year (October 1). If such appropriations are not enacted by that time, one or more continuing resolutions (CRs) may be necessary to prevent a funding gap from occurring until annual appropriations are completed or the fiscal year ends. Programs that are funded through the appropriations process are at risk of a funding gap at the beginning of the fiscal year if annual appropriations or a CR is not enacted, or at any point during the fiscal year if a CR expires and has not been replaced by a further CR or annual appropriations. However, if a program's appropriations for all or part of a fiscal year are enacted in the previous year's appropriations act, the program might not experience a funding gap, depending on whether such appropriations were available during the period and were unexpended.²¹

Data on Advance Appropriations

The President's budget submissions since FY1976 are a source of data on the programs for which advance appropriations have been previously provided and/or requested. The Congressional Budget Act of 1974 requires that the President's budget submission include information related to budget estimates for advance appropriations in subsequent fiscal years (31 U.S.C. 1105(a)(17)). The list containing this required information was first included in the FY1976 budget submission (Appendix, Fiscal Year 1976 (Washington, DC: GPO, 1975), p. 1077). That list also noted advance appropriations that were authorized but not requested and all associated authorization laws for both the requested and unrequested accounts. The form of the list varied significantly over time through FY2007, at times also listing advance appropriations provided in the previous fiscal year's appropriations acts but not requested for inclusion in the upcoming acts. Since FY2008, the coverage of the list has included accounts receiving advance appropriations (along with funding amounts) in the previous fiscal year, in the current fiscal year, in the budget year, and requested for the fiscal year succeeding the budget year.

A related implication, but one that is more generally associated with a program's annual operations, is that advance appropriations may enable that program to avoid the need for any continuing appropriations during periods when the appropriations bills for that fiscal year have not yet been enacted. The potential consequences of CRs on program operations—including on funding levels, program delivery, management support, and revenue collection—have been noted by a variety of observers.²² Programs that have available to them advance appropriations to cover program costs likely would not be reliant on funding that would otherwise be provided through a CR.

Some have argued that programs that receive advance appropriations may be better able to engage in advance planning. Enacting funding for a program in advance may enable it to make long-term commitments related to its internal operations or the population that it serves.²³

²⁰ For further information with regard to funding gaps, see CRS Report RS20348, Federal Funding Gaps: A Brief Overview.

²¹ This implication has particularly been noted in the context of appropriated entitlements. For example, for the Special Benefits for Disabled Coal Miners account, the Senate Appropriations Committee noted in the report accompanying their FY2019 appropriations proposal, "The Committee also recommends an advance appropriation of $14,000,000 for the first quarter of fiscal year 2020.... These funds will ensure uninterrupted benefit payments to coal miners, their widows, and dependents." S.Rept. 115-289, p. 34.

Similarly, advance appropriations may assist agencies in planning and carrying out multi-year capital expenditures by spreading the cost over a number of fiscal years.²⁴ However, others argue that the ability to make such commitments may be limited by the extent to which programmatic needs can be forecasted in advance.²⁵ Congress may also prefer to exercise control over programs through annual appropriations in certain circumstances, even if that limits the advance planning that can occur.

Recent Funding Practices

Advance appropriations are typically enacted at an interval of one fiscal year prior to when such appropriations become available. For example, FY2020 funds for the “medical facilities” (VHA—Department of Veterans Affairs) account were provided one year in advance in the FY2019 appropriations act:

For necessary expenses for the maintenance and operation of hospitals, nursing homes, domiciliary facilities, and other necessary facilities of the Veterans Health Administration; for administrative expenses in support of planning, design, project management, real property acquisition and disposition, construction, and renovation of any facility under the jurisdiction or for the use of the Department; for oversight, engineering, and architectural activities not charged to project costs; for repairing, altering, improving, or providing facilities in the several hospitals and homes under the jurisdiction of the Department, not otherwise provided for, either by contract or by the hire of temporary employees and purchase of materials; for leases of facilities; and for laundry services; $90,180,000, which shall be in addition to funds previously appropriated under this heading that become available on October 1, 2018; and, in addition, $6,141,880,000, plus reimbursements, shall become available on October 1, 2019, and shall remain available until September 30, 2020: Provided, That, of the amount made available on October 1, 2019, under this heading, $250,000,000 shall remain available until September 30, 2021. [P.L. 115-244]

Less frequently, accounts receive advance appropriations for the second fiscal year succeeding the budget year of the appropriations law in which they are enacted. For example, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting received FY2021 appropriations two years in advance in the FY2019 appropriations act:

For payment to the Corporation for Public Broadcasting (“CPB”), as authorized by the Communications Act of 1934, an amount which shall be available within limitations specified by that Act, for the fiscal year 2021, $445,000,000. [P.L. 115-245]

²⁵ This issue was discussed, for example, when Congress first considered providing the Department of Veterans Affairs with advance appropriations. Susan Irving, “VA Health Care: Challenges in Budget Formulation and Issues Surrounding the Proposal for Advance Appropriations,” U.S. Government Accountability Office (GAO), GAO-09-664T, April 29, 2009; CRS Report R40489, Advance Appropriations for Veterans’ Health Care: Issues and Options for Congress, pp. 11-12. See also H.Rept. 111-171, which accompanied H.R. 1016, Veterans Health Care Budget Reform and Transparency Act of 2009.

Because advance appropriations are defined by when they make funds first available for obligation—and not how long they are available—such funds may be provided for one year, multiyear, and no-year periods. In addition, as previously mentioned, advance appropriations may be provided for shorter time periods, such as the first part of the fiscal year. For example, the advance appropriation for the “payments for foster care and permanency” (Administration for Children and Families—Department of Health and Human Services) account was available for the first quarter of the fiscal year only:

For making payments to States or other non-Federal entities under title IV-E of the Social Security Act, for the first quarter of fiscal year 2020, $2,800,000,000. [P.L. 115-245]

A number of other accounts also receive first quarter advance appropriations in current practice, including Tenant-Based Rental Assistance and Project-Based Rental Assistance (Department of Housing and Urban Development); Grants to States for Medicaid and Payments to States for Child Support Enforcement and Family Support (Department of Health and Human Services); and Supplemental Security Income (Social Security Administration).

Adjustments to Advance Appropriated Funding

For accounts that receive advance appropriations, the amount of budget authority that will be available once the fiscal year commences is sometimes adjusted in subsequent appropriations acts. In some instances, an account is appropriated some funds a year in advance, and then the remainder of the funds are appropriated for the budget year. However, those advance appropriated funds provided through the prior appropriations act may be subsequently reduced through a rescission.²⁶

In the example below—which is excerpted from the FY2012 Transportation, Housing and Urban Development, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act—the account for Public and Indian Housing—tenant-based rental assistance received additional funding to the prior year’s advance in the budget year plus an advance appropriation for the succeeding fiscal year:

For activities and assistance for the provision of tenant-based rental assistance authorized under the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1437 et seq.) (“the Act” herein), not otherwise provided for, $14,914,369,000, to remain available until expended, shall be available on October 1, 2011 (in addition to the $4,000,000,000 previously appropriated under this heading that became available on October 1, 2011), and $4,000,000,000, to remain available until expended, shall be available on October 1, 2012. [P.L. 112-55]

An additional provision in this appropriations act also adjusted downward the amount that was advance appropriated in the FY2011 appropriations act.

Of the unobligated balances remaining from funds appropriated under the heading “Tenant-Based Rental Assistance” under the “Full-Year Continuing Appropriations Act, 2011”, $650,000,000 are rescinded from the $4,000,000,000 which are available on October 1, 2011. [P.L. 112-55]

As an effect of these provisions, the amount of new budget authority available for this account as of October 1, 2011, was

- the $4,000,000,000 advance appropriation;
- plus the $14,914,369,000 budget year appropriation;

²⁶ A rescission is the cancellation of previously enacted budget authority while it is still available for obligation.

- minus the $650,000,000 rescission;
- for a total of $18,264,369,000.

Forward Funding

Forward funds become available during the last quarter of the budget year and continue into at least the following fiscal year.²⁷ For example, in an appropriations bill for FY2020, budget authority that is forward funded would become available during FY2020 but not until July 1, 2020, or later and would remain available through all or part of FY2021. This budget authority is often available for a period of more than 12 months, in which case it can be classified as multi-year budget authority²⁸ but may also be provided in shorter increments.

While the first use of forward funding is unknown, the modern practice appears to have emerged as a response to the change in the federal fiscal year from July 1 to October 1 in fiscal year 1976.²⁹ This new schedule made funding certain activities difficult if the activities required obligations to be made in the summer and remain available through the fall. At least partially in response to this issue, some programs were provided forward funding to allow such obligations to occur.³⁰

Under current practice, this period of availability is used only for programs that are funded by discretionary spending at the Department of Education, for the largest formula grant programs to states; and at the Department of Labor, for vocational training programs. These particular programs require significant obligations during the summer to prepare for activities that coincide with the school year.³¹ Although advance appropriations might enable these programs to plan ahead based on those budgetary resources, such advance appropriations could not be obligated until they became available at the beginning of the fiscal year.³² Forward funding part or all of a

(1) for grants to States for adult employment and training activities, youth activities, and dislocated worker employment and training activities, $2,789,832,000 as follows:

(A) $845,556,000 for adult employment and training activities, of which $133,556,000 shall be available for the period July 1, 2019 through June 30, 2020, and of which $712,000,000 shall be available for the period October 1, 2019 through June 30, 2020;

(B) $903,416,000 for youth activities, which shall be available for the period April 1, 2019 through June 30, 2020; and...

This delayed period of availability for these funds is not considered to be forward funding because the funds become available prior to the last quarter of the budget year.

program, in contrast, allows for obligations to occur up to three months prior to that time so that the availability of funds coincides with the program year.³³

Recent Funding Practices³⁴

Forward funds tend to become available at an interval that starts on July 1. Funds are available during at least two fiscal years, but the duration of these funds may be for one year or multiple years, depending on whether the funds are available for more or fewer than 12 months. For example, a 15-month (multiyear) period of availability was specified for certain Department of Education (Section 304) funds:

Funds appropriated in this Act and consolidated for evaluation purposes under section 8601(c) of the ESEA shall be available from July 1, 2019, through September 30, 2020. [P.L. 115-245]

Mixed Approaches

While forward funding is sometimes provided as the only schedule of availability for an account, it usually is combined with either budget year or advance appropriations. This allows for only the portion of the program that requires summer obligations to be funded in this manner, while the remaining aspects can be funded through annual or advance appropriations. For example, the Office of Job Corps (Employment and Training Administration—Department of Labor) account contained both forward funding and annual appropriations:

To carry out subtitle C of title I of the WIOA, including Federal administrative expenses, the purchase and hire of passenger motor vehicles, the construction, alteration, and repairs of buildings and other facilities, and the purchase of real property for training centers as authorized by the WIOA, $1,718,655,000, plus reimbursements, as follows:

- (1) $1,603,325,000 for Job Corps Operations, which shall be available for the period July 1, 2019 through June 30, 2020 [forward funding];
- (2) $83,000,000 for construction, rehabilitation and acquisition of Job Corps Centers, which shall be available for the period July 1, 2019 through June 30, 2022 [forward funding]...
- (3) $32,330,000 for necessary expenses of Job Corps, which shall be available for obligation for the period October 1, 2018 through September 30, 2019 [annual appropriations]. [P.L. 115-245]

Forward funding combined with advance appropriations was provided by the Education for the Disadvantaged (Department of Education) account:

For carrying out title I and subpart 2 of part B of title II of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (referred to in this Act as “ESEA”) and section 418A of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (referred to in this Act as “HEA”), $16,543,790,000, of which $5,625,990,000 shall become available on July 1, 2019, and shall remain available through September 30, 2020, [forward funding] and of which $10,841,177,000 shall become available on October 1, 2019, and shall remain available through September 30, 2020, [advance appropriations] for academic year 2019–2020. [P.L. 115-245]

Advance Funding

Advance funding is a form of budget authority provided for a small number of accounts that allows for additional obligations late in the budget year that are counted as a part of the succeeding fiscal year's funding.³⁵ This authority has three primary defining characteristics. First, advance funds are provided for an account in addition to the appropriation for the budget year in that account. Second, advance funds become available only after the budget year has begun, usually during the last two months of that year, and are no longer available once the budget year ends. Third, any expenditure of the advance funds is directed in the appropriations act to be charged to the succeeding fiscal year's appropriation.³⁶

For example, an appropriations act for FY2020 provides $100 million for an account in annual appropriations and additional budget authority for such sums as may be necessary (SSAN) for obligations after September 1, 2020. Legislative language in that account further directs that any expenditure of SSAN budget authority is to be charged to the next fiscal year's appropriation for FY2021. At the end of FY2020, the obligations of the advance funds total $1 million. Subsequent appropriations for FY2021 total $100 million plus advance funding for that account, and the $1 million in obligations of the FY2020 advance funding is charged against that $100 million for FY2020. Effectively, then, FY2021 budget authority for new obligations is $99 million plus the advance funds for FY2021.

As with forward funding, the first time that advance funds were provided in an appropriations act is not known. Provisions that display the essential characteristics of advance funding date back to at least FY1967, when such additional funds were provided for the Unemployment Compensation for Federal Employees and Ex-Servicemen account.³⁷ Historically, advance funding has tended to be provided for certain accounts that fund payments based on an entitlement formula. The practice of providing for such entitlements through advance funding, as opposed to other funding mechanisms, appears to be a legacy of earlier funding practices that pre-date the current

³⁶ This is in contrast to supplemental funds that are provided late in the fiscal year in the event that the annual funds that were provided are insufficient to finance program obligations, which are charged to that fiscal year. For example, the Payments for Foster Care and Permanency account (Administration for Children and Families—Department of Health and Human Services) provides, “For making, after May 31 of the current fiscal year, payments to States or other non-Federal entities under section 474 of title IV-E of the Social Security Act, for the last 3 months of the current fiscal year for unanticipated costs, incurred for the current fiscal year, such sums as may be necessary” (P.L. 112-74).

³⁷ P.L. 97-787, which provided:

For payments to unemployed Federal employees and ex-servicemen, as authorized by title XV of the Social Security Act, as amended, $65,000,000, of which not to exceed $5,000,000 shall be available for benefit payments for trade adjustment activities, together with such amount as may be necessary to be charged to the subsequent year appropriation for the payment of benefits for any period subsequent to March 31 of the current year.

Advance funding, as a concept, dates back at least to the President's FY1981 budget submission (Appendix, Fiscal Year 1981 (Washington, DC: GPO, 1980), p. 1143). CRS was unable to determine if this concept existed at any earlier period.

conceptualization of budget enforcement and execution.³⁸ It has limited application in the present day, as only two accounts currently receive advance funding:

1. Office of Workers Compensation Programs—Special Benefits (Department of Labor); and
2. Federal Unemployment Benefits and Allowances (Employment and Training Administration—Department of Labor).

The total amount of payments that are funded by these and similar accounts may be particularly sensitive to changes in eligible beneficiaries or difficult to predict more than a year in advance. In such instances, providing extra funds that become available late in the fiscal year might lessen or eliminate the potential for a funding shortfall and the need for separate supplemental appropriations. However, because any obligations of such funds must be charged to the succeeding fiscal year, any use of this budget authority technically reduces base appropriations that are available in that future year.³⁹

Recent Funding Practices⁴⁰

Both the date of initial availability and consequent duration of the advance funds for the two accounts vary slightly. The first account, Office of Workers Compensation Programs—Special Benefits (Department of Labor), is provided advance funds for about the last seven weeks of the fiscal year:

For the payment of compensation, benefits, and expenses (except administrative expenses) accruing during the current or any prior fiscal year authorized by 5 U.S.C. 81; continuation of benefits as provided for under the heading “Civilian War Benefits” in the Federal Security Agency Appropriation Act, 1947; the Employees’ Compensation Commission Appropriation Act, 1944; section 5(f) of the War Claims Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2012); obligations incurred under the War Hazards Compensation Act (42 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.); and 50 percent of the additional compensation and benefits required by section 10(h) of the Longshore and Harbor Workers’ Compensation Act, $230,000,000, together with such amounts as may be necessary to be charged to the subsequent year appropriation for the payment of compensation and other benefits for any period subsequent to August 15 of the current year. [P.L. 115-245]

The second account, Federal Unemployment Benefits and Allowances (Employment and Training Administration—Department of Labor), which funds the Trade Adjustment Assistance for Workers program, is provided advance funds for about the last two weeks of the fiscal year:

For payments during fiscal year 2019 of trade adjustment benefit payments and allowances under part I of subchapter B of chapter 2 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974, and section 246 of that Act; and for training, employment and case management services, allowances for job search and relocation, and related State administrative expenses under part II of subchapter B of chapter 2 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974, and including benefit payments, allowances, training, employment and case management services, and related State administration provided pursuant to section 231(a) of the Trade Adjustment Assistance Extension Act of 2011 and section 405(a) of the Trade Preferences Extension

³⁹ It is not clear from a review of the program history of these and other accounts that have received advance funding why this funding structure is preferred, as opposed to supplemental budget authority that, if used, is charged to the budget year.

Act of 2015, $790,000,000 together with such amounts as may be necessary to be charged to the subsequent appropriation for payments for any period subsequent to September 15, 2019. [P.L. 115-245]

Budget Process Implications

Using an alternate period of availability to fund a program may have budget process implications. These implications derive from scorekeeping rules that govern the fiscal year to which such funds are attributed for the purposes of budget enforcement. Specifically, advance appropriations are scored as new budget authority in the fiscal year in which the funds become available for obligation, not when the appropriations are enacted.

The congressional budget resolution has imposed various limits on advance appropriations for discretionary spending since FY2001. These funding caps have varied slightly from year to year, ranging from approximately $23 billion to $28 billion annually in new budget authority. However, some programs are exempt from these set funding caps in some years, or have a separate cap. For example, the Veterans Health Administration's medical facilities and the Corporation for Public Broadcasting have had separate and distinct funding limitations.

For FY2018 in the House and Senate, and FY2019 in the Senate only, funding limits were established in the FY2018 budget resolution. Recent House rules have also included limits on advance appropriations for FY2019. Any discretionary spending in appropriations measures in violation of the limits would be subject to a point of order, which could be waived by a floor vote or a special rule in the House. If an alternate period of availability has not been authorized by law, making funds available on such a schedule in a general appropriations bill or amendment thereto may also subject it to a point of order under House and Senate rules.⁴¹

Scorekeeping Considerations

Statutory processes and congressional procedures enforce fiscal agreements, both during the consideration of budgetary measures and once they have been enacted.⁴² This enforcement is based upon estimated budgetary effects that are attributed (i.e., "scored") by fiscal year. Under longstanding scorekeeping guidelines, new budget authority is attributed to the first fiscal year that it is available for obligation.⁴³ Consequently, advance appropriations are not scored against the budget year covered by the bill in which they are enacted but instead against the first fiscal year for which they are provided (one or more years after the budget year).⁴⁴ Forward funding, in contrast, is scored against the budget year of the bill in which it is enacted, because it becomes available during the budget year. Similarly, because advance funding is for mandatory spending,

⁴¹ Note, the rules of the House and Senate are not self-enforcing. A Member must raise a point of order against a measure or amendment to trigger the described procedures.

CBO attributes the total projected budget authority and outlays that will be required for the budget year to that account.

Limits on Advance Appropriations Associated with the Budget Resolution, Bipartisan Budget Agreements (BBAs), and House Rules

Congress has imposed procedural controls to limit the overall level of advance appropriations in response to concerns that such appropriations may affect future budgetary resources and that they might be used to circumvent other budgetary controls. Between FY1991 and FY2002, statutory spending limits restricted the amount of discretionary spending for each fiscal year.⁴⁵ Because budget authority is scored against the first year it is available, advance appropriations could be enacted for future fiscal years that would not count against the current fiscal year's limits. Previously enacted advance appropriations would, however, count against those limits if they were first available during that budget year. As a consequence, some observers became concerned that an increase in the use of advance appropriations could affect flexibility in future budgetary decisions.⁴⁶ Because of this, the FY2001 budget resolution, and every budget resolution thereafter, has contained provisions limiting future advance appropriations.

The first limits on advance appropriations created points of order on the House and Senate floor against the consideration of future legislation that would enact such appropriations above a specified dollar amount.⁴⁷ These provisions also provided procedures for a supermajority waiver and appeal in the Senate.⁴⁸ Similar restrictions were in the FY2002 budget resolution, which also included new provisions exempting advance appropriations for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting from these limits.⁴⁹ The FY2004 and FY2006 budget resolutions both carried similar language to FY2002, except that advance appropriations were further restricted to a list of ⁴⁵ For further information on these discretionary spending limits, see CRS Report R41901, Statutory Budget Controls in Effect Between 1985 and 2002.

⁴⁷ Sections 203 and 204 of H.Con.Res. 290. Also in FY2001, a related provision was included in H.Con.Res. 290 (§204(c)):

(c) POINT OF ORDER WITH RESPECT TO DELAYED OBLIGATIONS-

(1) IN GENERAL- Except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any bill, resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that contains an appropriation of new budget authority for any fiscal year which does not become available upon enactment of such legislation or on the first day of that fiscal year (whichever is later).

(2) EXCEPTION- Paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to appropriations in the defense category; nor shall it apply to appropriations reoccurring or customary.

This provision would appear to prohibit forward funding and advance funding not "recurring or customary," as such funds are available after the beginning of the budget year. Such language was not included in budget resolutions in future fiscal years.

⁴⁸ Such procedures provided that, if the point of order is sustained, the provision providing advance appropriations would be stricken.

⁴⁹ H.Con.Res. 83 (FY2002), §§201, 202. An additional new provision also expressed the sense of Congress that the Congressional Budget Act should be amended to address procedures for advance appropriations. This provision was not included in subsequent restrictions on advance appropriations.

eligible accounts.⁵⁰ In FY2008 and FY2009, the House discontinued the exemption for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, although the Senate continued to include it in its procedures for advance appropriations.⁵¹ The FY2010 budget resolution added the Department of Veterans Affairs for the Medical Services, Medical Support and Compliance, and Medical Facilities accounts of the Veterans Health Administration to the list of accounts that were explicitly exempt in the House and Senate from the advance appropriations cap.⁵²

Although the House and Senate did not agree on a budget resolution for FY2011, FY2012, FY2013, or FY2014,⁵³ the Bipartisan Budget Act of 2013 (Division A, H.J.Res. 59, 113th Congress) reinstated procedural limits on advance appropriations in the House and the Senate. Section 112 of the Bipartisan Budget Act limited the aggregate total of advance appropriations in the Senate for FY2014 and FY2015 appropriations acts. Section 113 deemed the provisions of the House-adopted version of the budget resolution (H.Con.Res. 25) to be enforceable in the House for the remainder of the 113th Congress, including the provisions therein that limit advance appropriations in FY2014 appropriations acts (Section 601).⁵⁴ Subsequent bipartisan budget agreements in 2015 and 2018 retained limitations on advance appropriations. The 2015 agreement provided procedural limits in the Senate (Section 102) for FY2017. Additionally, the 2018 agreement included provisions to allow the House to update the limits carried in the prior budget resolution by one fiscal year (Section 30104).

The FY2016 budget resolution (S.Con.Res. 11) imposed separate procedural limits for the House and Senate on advance appropriations. The form of the limit in the House was the same as the FY2014 limit associated with the Bipartisan Budget Act. The form of the Senate restriction, however, differed from previous fiscal years in that it was specific to advance appropriations in discretionary accounts and applied to both FY2016 and FY2017 appropriations acts.

Limits for FY2018 (and also FY2019 for the Senate only) were established in the FY2017 budget resolution (H.Con.Res. 71). Like the FY2016 budget resolution, the House and Senate received separate procedural limits.

In addition, the House has adopted advance appropriations limits as a separate order as part of the resolution adopting the chamber's rules, as in H.Res. 5 (112th Congress, for FY2012), H.Res. 5 (115th Congress, for FY2017), and now H.Res. 6 (116th Congress, for FY2019).

⁵⁰ H.Con.Res. 95, §501 (FY2004); H.Con.Res. 95, §402 (FY2006).

⁵¹ S.Con.Res. 21, §206 (FY2008). In addition, this section carried different aggregate limits on advance appropriations for each chamber ($25,158,000,000 for the Senate; $25,558,000,000 for the House). Presumably this was to allow appropriations for the Corporation for Public Broadcasting appropriations, which were no longer exempted from the House limit. S.Con.Res. 70, Sections 302 and 313 (FY2009), however, carried the same aggregate limits on advance appropriations for each chamber ($28,852,000,000 for the House and Senate).

⁵² S.Con.Res. 13 (FY2010), §§402, 424.

⁵³ To provide budget enforcement for FY2012, the House adopted H.Res. 287, which deemed the House-adopted version of the budget resolution (H.Con.Res. 34) to be enforceable in the House as a budget resolution agreed to by Congress. Section 402 of H.Con.Res. 34 imposed limits on FY2013 advance appropriations. Similarly, the following year, the House adopted H.Res. 614, which deemed the House-adopted version of the FY2013 budget resolution (H.Con.Res. 112) to be enforceable in the House. Section 501 of H.Con.Res. 112 imposed limits on FY2014 advance appropriations. No new limits were provided in the Senate for FY2012 or FY2013. For further information on these "deeming resolutions," see CRS Report RL31443, The "Deeming Resolution": A Budget Enforcement Tool.

⁵⁴ Section 115(c) of the Bipartisan Budget Act further provided for the House to extend the current limits on FY2015 advance appropriations through the following fiscal year.

The full text of the provisions limiting advance appropriations since FY2001 is provided in the Appendix.

Legislating on Appropriations

Both House and Senate Rules contain provisions that restrict the content of appropriations measures.⁵⁵ In general, such rules restrict the inclusion of appropriations not previously authorized by law or other “legislative provisions” that have the effect of changing existing law under certain circumstances.⁵⁶ Precedents associated with these rules may prohibit advance appropriations or forward funding when it is not authorized by law. House precedents generally prohibit appropriations for durations that are beyond the fiscal year covered by the bill, such as appropriations that are made “available until expended,” except when “existing law can be interpreted to permit that availability.”⁵⁷ Because both advance appropriations and forward funds are by definition available for a duration that is beyond the budget year, these periods of availability may need to be authorized, or at least permitted, by law in order for such subsequent appropriations to be in order under House rules. Senate precedents are more ambiguous. However, as was the case for the House, the Senate has precedents that prohibit no-year appropriations when no authorization for such availability exists.⁵⁸ Those precedents may be applicable to advance appropriations and forward funding.

There appear to be no House or Senate precedents that directly address the issue of advance funding. Such provisions could be considered to be legislative if they are determined to improperly restrict the timing of expenditures, the authority for which has been conferred under existing law to both the Office of Management and Budget and the agency.⁵⁹

On this and other matters, the rules of the House and Senate are not self-enforcing. A Member must raise a timely point of order against a measure or amendment to trigger the procedures described above.⁶⁰ In addition, the House may waive clause 2(b) and (c) of Rule XXI through the adoption of a special rule, unanimous consent, or suspension of the rules.⁶¹ The Senate, likewise, may waive paragraphs (2) and (4) of Rule XVI through unanimous consent or suspension of the rules.⁶²

⁵⁵ These restrictions are primarily located in House Rule XXI and Senate Rule XVI.

⁵⁹ The House has explicitly addressed this issue in other appropriations contexts in Deschler's Precedents, vol. 8, chapter 26, §51.23.
